Early Bird Bandit Robs Jacksonville Bank

Last Saturday morning, while government employees stayed home on furlough and Jacksonville enjoyed its last peaceful, student-free weekend, the criminals were rising early.

Just before 8 a.m. Saturday morning, according to reports from the Anniston Star, an armed man approached a teller in the parking lot of Farmer's and Merchant's Bank on South Pelham Road. The robber forced the teller inside the building and ordered her to open the bank's safe. He then seized an undetermined amount of cash. When another employee arrived at the building, the robber tied him up.

The robber fled in the teller's Chevy Astrovan. He tried to take the teller with him, but she struggled, and was knocked unconscious. The teller was treated at Jacksonville Hospital and released.

The stolen van was found abandoned on Cottaquilla Road, roughly one half-mile from White's Gap Baptist Church, where police believe a getaway car may have been waiting.

Police reports describe the robber as a white male weighing between 180 and 200 pounds, between 6 feet and 6 feet 2 inches in height. The man was last seen wearing a ski mask, gloves, white tennis shoes, blue jeans and a dark gray or black jacket with a hood.

The Jacksonville Police Department asks anyone with information leading to the arrest of the robber to contact them at 435-4010. The Alabama Bureau of Investigation and the Federal Bureau of Investigation are also pursuing the matter.

Representatives of Farmers and Merchants Bank would not comment on the robbery. The FBI could not be reached for comment.

Holiday Tragedy Claims Life of Teacher of the Year

"She gave me a chance when no one else would," said one former student of Sharon Dempsey, a math instructor at Jacksonville State. "I was devastated."

The entire staff of the Mathematics Department at JSU was stunned by the news of Dempsey's death, which occurred a week before Christmas. The cause of death is believed to be an aneurism.

"An aneurism is a ballooning of an artery, which can later burst," says Dr. Murray Riggins, Medical Director at Jacksonville Hospital's Emergency Room, which was not involved in Dempsey's case. "If it happens in the brain, it can cause a stroke or sometimes death."

Riggins says an aneurism can be cured through surgery "if you catch it in time." The condition is difficult to diagnose in its early stages: the only symptom is a severe, incapacitating headache. "You could have an aneurism developing in your brain right now and not know it."

Like most people in the Mathematics Department, Dr. Jerald Abercrombie has trouble speaking of his colleague in the past tense: "She and Wayne (Dempsey's husband) were involved in just about every organization in town. When we heard about her death, it was really a shock, especially since we saw them just a couple of days before."

Winter Storm Delays Semester Beginning

by Steven Skelton
News Writer

Snow and ice made their first appearance only a week into the new year, with freezing precipitation blanketing a large portion of the state.

The rain began on Friday night, continuing unabated throughout Saturday. By 3 a.m. Sunday morning, snow had begun accumulating not only on cars and houses, but on the ground itself.

The storm had been predicted as early as Wednesday, sending droves of people to grocery stores. Milk, bread, eggs, and batteries sold out at many stores. Even though only light flurries were forecast for Thursday night, with rain starting Friday and turning to snow by Sunday many people statewide decided not to take their chances.

JSU's reaction to the storm was conducted by the University's Physical Plant. Beginning at 9 a.m. Sunday, maintenance crews were out sanding, salting, and scraping roads and sidewalks. Ice, not snow, turned out to be the biggest problem for the area.

Physical Plant director Jim MacArthur said that there were no damages to University property, and that the safety of commuting students was their first concern. "The cold was bad, but not that bad," he said. "Of course, we're not out of winter yet."

Although some snow and ice melted on Sunday, most of it was still around Sunday night. The few spots that had melted refroze due to single-digit temperatures, closing roads in much of northeastern Alabama. The road closings forced the University to cancel classes for Monday, which was scheduled to be the first day the new semester.

Roads were the biggest problem to come out of the storm, according to State Trooper Public Information Officer Stanley Lemon. All of the roads in Calhoun county and many of the surrounding counties were closed all day Sunday, and much of the day Monday. Motorists were cautioned to stay off of the roads, stranding many holiday travelers and closing businesses and schools.

Some drivers decided to take a risk and drive anyway. One motorist, an 18-year-old Anniston native, lost his life when his

by College Press Service

The all-male Citadel is accepting applications from women.

Even though the courts haven't decided whether women may enroll as cadets in the all-male corps, The Citadel said it will send applications to women who request them, under a plan filed in federal court in December.

According to the plan, women seeking applications would receive a letter explaining that the question of female cadets is before the courts.

Women whose applications are rejected will be informed of the reasons why, and the school would inform the U.S. Department of Justice of its actions for each individual application.

So far, The Citadel has four applications from women on file but has not made a decision on them, said a school spokesperson.

One of the applicants is Nancy Mellette, who has taken Shannon Faulkner's place in the lawsuit against the military college.

The battle to admit women to the corps began when Faulkner deleted gender references from her high school transcripts. She was accepted, but later rejected when the school learned she was female. Faulkner sued, was admitted as the first woman to the corps, but dropped out in August, less than a week into training.

Meanwhile, the 4th U.S. Circuit Court of Appeals has ruled the cadet corps at the The Citadel and Virginia Military Institute, the nation's only two all-male, state-supported military colleges, can keep their single-sex programs if comparable leadership programs are established for women.

Dempsey earned both her undergraduate and Master's degrees at Jacksonville State. She taught at Walter Wellborn High School and Piedmont High School, and began teaching full time at JSU in 1985.

"She encouraged me when others wouldn't," says Bobby Whaley, one of Dempsey's former students. "I wasn't the best undergraduate student. I had a C average, but she encouraged me to keep trying." Whaley now holds a Master's degree in Mathematics, and teaches the subject at Weaver High School.

"My success is largely due to her influence," Whaley continued. "She was more than a teacher. She was truly an angel, and now I know she is among them."

Dempsey was a member of the First United Methodist Church in Jacksonville, where she sang car skidded on a patch of ice, sending the car into the side of a train. The accident was the only serious one in Calhoun county caused by the storm, and the only fatality, according to Trooper Lemon.

Some roads remained closed throughout the day Monday, including U.S. 278 to Piedmont, and I-20 through Oxford. "The interstate is cleared now," Lemon said. "It was one of our biggest problems."

No power outages or downed trees occurred due to the storm. "Even though it was worse than predicted, it was not as bad as it could have been," Lemon said.

The storm moved northeastward from the Gulf of Mexico, dumping record amounts of snowfall in Washington, Boston, New York City, and much of the Mid-Atlantic and New England areas.

ISSUE OF THE WEEK

Information Highway Robbery: Who foots JSU's computer bill?

Computers are everywhere these days. The workplace, playground, and shopping mall of the future, many say, will all be reached through personal computers.

Jacksonville State has not ignored this trend toward a digital future, and has been frantically striving to improve the level of computational expertise and experience it provides to its students. New computer labs, student Internet access, and increasingly updated equipment are testimony to the University's devotion to keeping up with the times to come.

What you will discover if you are taking any computer-related courses, however, is that the University is subsidizing the entire student body's access to equipment and services through lab fees charged only to a small portion of the student body. At $10 a pop for each class requiring the use of a lab, these fees can quickly add up to a significant portion of a computer-oriented student's college tab. With the outrageous cost of everything from books to food, this is one added expense that can seem a little unjustified.

All students at JSU have access to the university's computer labs, provided the lab isn't occupied by a class. The only fee students are required to pay for the use of the University's reasonably state-of-the-art equipment, services, and software is the standard tuition rate.

Students majoring in or studying computer science, computer information systems, etc., who are forced to use the labs in class are being made to pay an additional fee for taking the classes. Tuition apparently isn't enough, so the University has deemed it appropriate to charge an additional fee for an academic requirement.

Is this right? This question seems even more appropriate when one takes into light the fact that the rest of the student body, with just a tuition payment, can use the labs for any academic purpose they see fit, even if it's not a requirement. Not to mention the fact that even though the labs are supposedly meant only for strictly academic pursuits, it seems nearly impossible to police them for use for personal concerns. In any case, only a few students seem to be paying for what the entire student body has the use of.

How can it be made fair? If the University wants to continue to provide this equipment and these services to the student body at large, perhaps an across the board tuition increase intended solely for computer-related uses would be in order. At least in this case we'd know exactly where our increased tuition dollars were going.

WE SUGGEST:

Politics in '96 Dominated by Morality

A new election year is upon us, and predictions are in season. One prediction, on the lips of every political pundit, is sure to come true: 1996 will be dominated by the politics of morality.

A lot of people shudder at the thought of a campaign centered on moral values, and with good reason: the values of politicians are ultimately political. The medium, as they say, is the message. The nature of commercial television crowds out fare with limited appeal: opera, ballet, educational programming for children, and so forth. Moral philosophers must deal regularly with very ugly truth, and the medium of politics has little place for ugly truth. Here are a few hard truths which we would do well to remember in the coming year:

Morality is a personal battle.

Morality is, almost by definition, a matter of personal responsibility, and the personal responsibility requires us to look inward, rather than pointing the finger at the people who live across the tracks. If you don't like the state of television today, your first order of business should be to turn the blasted thing off. A "zone defense" is the best defense against evil: each member of the team should play primarily within the confines of his own soul. Each of us is capable of evil, and the moral failings of our nation cannot be blamed on immigrants, artists, gay people, or federal judges, all of whom—believe it or not—is every bit as human as "the average American voter."

Thou shalt not bear false witness...

Anyone who has ever consciously harmed another person has felt compelled to justify his action through lies and rationalization. Lies and rationalization are the mother's milk of politicians of every stripe. Looking to politicians for moral guidance is at best a tricky proposition.

Evil existed before 1968.

And it existed right here in America. Today's politicians point to the 1960's as the era when the splintering of America began, but a good deal of the blame can be laid on rich white men who declared that "all men are created equal" while still owning slaves. We should admit to ourselves that the Utopian dream of America in the 1950's is a flawed memory. Why can't we focus on a future in which we all get along, rather than invoking a past which, for many of us, was very unpleasant?

Capitalism is not God.

For four decades, the United States waged war against an officially atheist, Communist power. Somewhere along the line we acquired the idea that capitalism is the antithesis of all that is evil in the world. Capitalism works, but capitalism is not enough. Someone, somewhere, has to decide to treat his employees like human beings, and to create a product which gives consumers what they pay for. Our political system reveres materialism as a moral imperative, and this is contrary to the teachings of most major religions.

"We the People" means everybody.

Our political leaders talk a great deal about "dehumanization" in modern culture. Yet the purposes of humanization are not served by the rhetoric of veiled bigotry. Even when we wage war, we have a responsibility to acknowledge the humanity of the people we intend to kill. There is no excuse for cordoning off large groups of our own countrymen and declaring them to be "evil," or "un-American." Inasmuch as we are all human beings, each of "us" is one of "them."

Blade Runner 2: The Edge Of Human

By: K. W. Jester

In 1982, Ridley Scott made one of the most influential films of all time, Blade Runner. It was the story of a ex-mercenary named Rick Deckard and his hunt for renegade replicants — artificial humans far superior to the originals. By the end of the movie fans were left with more questions than they began with. What is the future of Deckard and his replicant companion, Rachael? Is Deckard a replicant? etc, etc, etc.

Now it's over a decade later and science fiction writer K. W. Jester has decided to try and answer those questions, along with giving us a whole slew of new ones. Jester's novel is just as captivating and haunting as the movie. The Blade Runner world of cyberpunk technology and a civilization on the brink of internal destruction is the perfect backdrop for what is essentially a mystery novel.

Without giving away the novels twists and turns, I will tell you a little bit to wet your appetite. In the opening Deckard is captured by the Tyrell Corporation, the company that built the replicants. Deckard then finds out that one of the replicants he killed, Pris, was not a replicant at all, but a human. Now Deckard is wanted for the murder of Pris. Before he can be arrested, Deckard is dropped into the middle of Los Angeles with nothing but a drive to find Rachael and the now "unknown" sixth replicant. This search leads to a conspiracy that goes up to the highest levels of police and government. To add to Deckard's problems in his hunt for the truth, he becomes hunted himself by his old partner Dave Holden, a blade runner who believes that he knows who the missing sixth replicant is: Rick Deckard.

Jester's highly detailed story telling weaves an other-worldly tale that drags you into a hellish future. Don't plan to leave until the very end. -Keith Tasker

Answers To The Questions?: J. W. Jester's sequel to the cult hit Blade Runner once again leaves you with more questions than answers.

Gamecocks to take on Charleston Cougars

by Will Roe
Sports Editor

Jacksonville State, fresh off a 96-67 thumping of the Stetson Hatters on Saturday night, brings in the College of Charleston Cougars tonight. College of Charleston brings an 8-2 record into tonight's game. The Gamecocks are 6-5 in their inaugural season at the Division I level.

The Gamecocks were supposed to play at Marshall on Monday night, but the game had to be postponed due to the blizzard that struck that area of the country over the weekend. No date has been set for the make-up game against the Thundering Herd.

Lately, senior Edward Coleman has carried the Gamecocks into conference play, as he scored 18 points and pulled down 9 rebounds in the Gamecock's 93-73 loss to Central Florida last Thursday night, and Coleman scored 20 in the bashing of Stetson to give Jax State its first TAAC victory.

Over the holidays, the Gamecocks went 3-3. On December 16, JSU out-ran Mississippi Valley State 102-94 before 702 fans at Pete Mathews Coliseum. On December 19, the Gamecocks went deep into Texas and lost to Texas-El Paso 76-53. From there, it was on to the U.A.B. Classic, where in the first game, JSU beat up on Alabama State 82-68, giving Head Coach Bill Jones his 450th career win. In the championship of the UAB Classic, JSU played hard against host UAB, but came up on the short end of an 83-

72 score. Conference play began with the 93-73 loss to Central Florida last Thursday, ending the Gamecocks' 23-game home winning streak at Pete Mathews Coliseum. On Saturday came the big win over Stetson, as JSU held Stetson's preseason all-conference player Kerry Blackshear to just 8 points and 6 rebounds.

Tonight's game against College of Charleston is the second game of JSU Student Night, which means free prizes and give-aways to JSU students. In the first game, the Lady Gamecocks battle Campbell at 5:00. College of Charleston is a team that has been in post-season play for the last two years, going to the NCAA Tournament in 1994 and the NIT in 1995.
