There is, however, a plan to add ten new hour shifts, each followed by two days off. "The majority of students feel their peers shouldn’t be forced to participate against their will. It took a long time, but it’s changed."

CU Med Students No Longer Required to Participate In Dog Surgeries

Boulder, Colo.—It’s been an institutionalized tradition. For nearly two decades, all first-year University of Colorado Health Sciences Center medical students have been performing “faux surgeries” on live, anesthetized dogs. Finally, for some students, that tradition is over.

"I think it’s a very positive step forward for the students and faculty," said Jim Little, president of the medical school student body at the CU Health Sciences Center in Denver. "The majority of students feel their peers shouldn’t be forced to participate against their will. It took a long time, but it’s changed."

The three 10-week labs that use anesthetized dogs at the school are no longer mandatory for medical-school officials.

Free Screening Tests For Depression Offered

Baltimore—College campuses are urging students to “get more than a test score—get back your life!” with free mental health testing Oct. 9, on National Depression Screening Day.

"We hope that this nationwide effort to provide mental health screening for depression will educate the public about the signs and symptoms of depression," says Jacobs, "and encourage those who may be vulnerable to seek evaluation and treatment." According to city council member, Johnny L. Smith, they can take off eighteen hours extra leave for every twenty-four hours they work. City employees who work eight hour

Islamic Students Protest Scarfless ID Photos

Istanbul, Turkey—Many women worry about a bad hair day when they have their photographs taken for ID cards. But in Turkey, female students are angry that they have to show their hair at all. Several dozen women who wear headscarves because of their fundamental Islamic beliefs recently protested a new university policy requiring them to go scarfless for ID cards.

The students said the policy is a rejection of their religious beliefs.

Jacksonville city considers new buses

by Rachel Watkins

News writer

Ever wonder why it’s so hard to get into Stephenson Hall in the afternoons?

Only one out of every eighteen students in the Jacksonville City School System rides the bus, according to Superintendent Lee Messer. Bus service is in demand, and the school system is searching for ways to provide it, without breaking the bank.

"Buying a fleet of buses for the city of Jacksonville is not financially feasible," Messer says. At present, the city operates six school buses, some "piggybacked" from Calhoun County Schools, others rented from private contractors.

New buses cost around $50,000 apiece, but that’s only part of the cost facing a school system with its own fleet. According to Messer, the repair bills for a single bus can easily add up to $25,000 per year. The city would also have to hire drivers and contract security guards to protect the vehicles. The state of Alabama has a Fleet Renewal Plan, under which school systems are refunded one-tenth of the cost of new buses. Messer says that’s too little, too late. "If the school system were to buy a fleet of ten buses, at a cost of $550,000 this year," he says, "the city would only recoup $55,000 next year."

There is, however, a plan to add ten new buses, under the lend-and-lease system the school system is currently using. But not this year: Messer says he’ll pursue the new plan "after Calhoun County has undergone some administrative changes."

J’ville Firefighters seek better hours

by Cathy Higgins

Jacksonville firefighters now have a better way to take sick leave and vacation time. Monday night, the City Council approved long-debated proposal to shrink the “leave gap” between firefighters and other city employees. Under the proposal, firefighters get one shift of sick leave every two-and-one-half months.

Jacksonville State enrollment drops

by Buffy Smith

News writer

Enrollment has fallen slightly at JSU this fall. Last year there were over 7,700 students enrolled at Jax State, but this year there are about 7,660.

Graduate student enrollment has remained the same as last year, while transfer student enrollment has gone up, and Freshman enrollment has gone down.

According to Dr. Harold McGee, JSU President, this drop is due to three factors. First, there are fewer Georgia students because of the increased out-of-state tuition. More Georgians are staying in-state because of the lottery-funded “Hope” scholarship. This scholarship pays the tuition of high school freshmen with a “B” average in school, as long as they maintain a 3.0 GPA in college.

"We’re pleased that we’ve got the students that we do,"

--Dr. David Watts

McGee also says the second reason enrollment has dropped is that the high school graduating class of ‘97 was smaller than in recent years due to the size of the population.

A $37 million dollar a year cutback in college funding has also contributed to the loss in students. However, even though this caused a tuition hike, says McGee, Jax State still has the second lowest tuition in the state.

"We’re pleased that we’ve got the students that we do," says Dr. David Watts, President of Academic and Student Affairs, "we have solid numbers and we are very pleased." With the combination of cut funds and higher tuition, the administration is relieved only 45 students were lost, this is under one percent of the entire student population, according Watts. Despite the funding problems, JSU has remained the fifth largest university out of 18 in the state of Alabama. “We are in good shape, and we have a good faculty,” says Watts, “we’re ready for the coming year.”

JSU gets new religious group

by Cathy Higgins

News Feature

Chi Alpha is a new Christian organization at JSU. According to Lanier Nail, one of the three campus ministers, the letters make you think it’s a Greek organization, but it’s not. “We’re a Christian fellowship,” he says. “Basically, we’re here to help create a community of students who love Jesus and want to know him better.”

The organization is sponsored by the Assembly of God Church, but the campus ministers think that should be the only difference from the other religious organizations. “We also think it’s important that we’re here not only for Pentecostal students, but for any student who’s not being reached by any of the campus groups now,” says Nail. “Maybe if we can find students who have fallen through the cracks, that’ll be good.”

Nail, along with Erick and Sheryl Shwarzkopf, is striving to provide a positive atmosphere for college students. “We want it to be really community-based,” says Sheryl. “It’s not so much built on the weekly activities and programs, but more on the community and friendships.”

Jeff, a freshman, agrees. “It’s a good Christian atmosphere,” he says. “It makes you feel welcome.”

Tonight Chi Alpha will have its third meeting at the third floor of the Theron Montgomery Building at 7 pm. So far, fifteen students attended the first two meetings. Nail thinks that is a good start. “We want as many students as we can handle and it still be quality,” he says.

Chi Alpha has a lot to offer students besides weekly meetings. Weekly discipleship groups are available. Retreats during Christmas and Spring breaks are planned, as well as other camps. Nail looks forward to getting Chi Alpha off the ground. “We really want the students to take ownership of the ministry and to feel like it’s theirs,” he says. “They’re the leaders. We’re just here to train them and give oversight.” Sheryl agrees. “Once they get trained, it can grow, grow, grow.”

Headaches for direct student loan

by Charles Devaries

CTS

WASHINGTON—The U.S. Education Department temporarily shut down part of its direct student loan operation late last month in a move that may affect 70,000 students and undermine support for a federal program originally designed to ease the student loan process.

The Education Department suspended new applications under the Federal Direct Loan Consolidation Program because of difficulties in processing an applications backlog from students and recent graduates. This program allows students with two or more loans to consolidate them into a single direct loan, often with the benefit of a lower monthly payment.

Under direct loans, the U.S. Treasury provides capital directly to students and recent graduates, which affects only consolidations of existing loans, Education Department officials said.

Critics of the direct loan concept were quick to seize on the suspension as evidence of the program’s failures.

“The department’s failure to operate an efficient direct lending program is irresponsible,” said Rep. William Goodling (R-Pa.), chairman of the House Education and the Workforce Committee.

The Education Department pushed for the program as a less expensive, better managed alternative to bank-administered loans.

“The program was touted as ‘one-stop shopping’ by (Education) Secretary (Richard) Riley four years ago,” Goodling said. “Now, ‘The program was touted as ‘one-stop shopping’ by (Education) Secretary (Richard) Riley four years ago...Now, for some students, the program has become ‘no-stop’ shopping.”

--William Goodling

for some students, the program has become ‘no-stop’ shopping.

College students still may receive bank-administered loans, called Federal Family Education Loans (FFEL), a program that has continued following the launch of the direct loan program.

The suspension will affect about 70,000 consolidation requests, said Larry Zaglaniczny, associate director of the National Association of Student Financial Aid Administrators in Washington, D.C.

Consolidating through a direct loan has some advantages compared to consolidation through bank-generated loans, he said.

The main benefit is that students with direct loans can choose an income-contingent repayment, in which graduates set payments in line with their post-graduate incomes.

“Students generally do this for better cashflow and a lower monthly payment,” Zaglaniczny said. However, there is a tradeoff—a longer repayment period that leads to higher interest costs.

But for many graduates, the long-term costs are worth the short-term benefits. Consolidation “really pro-Tallahage, we looked at Gadsden, we looked at Anniston.” According to Anniston’s Civil Service Act, firefighters receive one day of sick leave per month.

The firefighters are concerned with the issue of sick leave in the long term. According to Daugherty, if a long time employee becomes unable to work because of illness or injury, he would receive six weeks less leave than other city employees. “He would receive less insurance coverage and less paycheck,” says Daugherty. “That’s when it became an issue.”

Although the city council has voted on the issue, it still hasn’t been implemented. According to Childs, the Jacksonville Civil Service Board has to vote on it. “It’ll still be another month or two,” he says.

Although the firefighters hope this is just the first step to getting a day leave per month, Smith believes it will be a while. “We’ll continue looking at it,” he says. “For right now, that’s going to be it.”

The Jacksonville Fire Department has thirteen full time firefighters who work regular shifts. “This sick leave and vacation leave is a sore spot with everybody,” says city firefighter Bill Cain.

Prepped and ready to go, the Jacksonville Firefighters complain of over work. Under the current system, the firefighters acquire one day of sick leave roughly every three months.

As Chi Alpha continues to grow, more programs will be offered. These would include more classes with more diversity, work with international students, and projects with dorms. But they don’t want to get bogged down by details, which is why Chi Alpha will not buy a building to use as a central meeting place. “We just don’t want to go off on something that takes us off our focus,” says Erick.

JSU is the fourth chapter of Chi Alpha. “We visited and felt like this is where we were suppose to be.”

UA’s chapter of Chi Alpha is thirteen years old, the oldest in the state. The three leaders felt that JSU could benefit from such an organization. “Before I went to college, I wasn’t even interested in ministry,” says Nail. “It’s only after getting involved in Chi Alpha at Alabama that I had any interest (in ministry) at all.”

To much time on incidentals

Going around school last semester, I noticed something that always happens, but shouldn’t. I saw a bunch of burned-out students. These were no ordinary students who got tired of the college grind. These were students taking 18-24 hours a semester, trying to graduate “on time.”

My main question to you masochists is: why are you in such a hurry to graduate?

Now, I understand the need to finish up school in four years and join the real world. But to crunch two semesters’ worth of work into one can play havoc on the nervous system.

Now, if you can handle the pressures, then great. You’ve got nothing to worry about.

But what if can’t handle it?

Let’s imagine you are one of these omni-grinds. You are taking twenty-one hours this semester. Four classes on Monday-Wednesday-Thursday-Friday, three on Tuesday-Thursday. And they’re all 300- and 400-level courses.

Masses of papers to write, experiments to conduct, and homework to churn out.

If you’re late on any one of these projects, your grades drop.

Pretty soon, unless you have the best organization skills, you’re mixing up your classes. You’ve just conjugated all the verbs on the test paper - in biology class. You’ve haphazardly explained the teachings of Descartes on the human psyche in your upper-level calculus class.

That’s when sleep starts getting in your way. You need more time for your projects, so you start double-buckling up on the Vivarin and expressos. All the lack of sleep set your nerves on edge.

Then you do the unthinkable. Your mother calls to see how you’re doing, and, due to your brain becoming so much mush, you yell at her. You bite her head off for interrupting your train of thought. She starts crying, you start apologizing, but it’s too late.

Now you got troubles at home. This, along with the mounting deadlines, start to screw up another aspect of college life: the social scene.

You’re in one of your classes, and you see someone who can be described as drop-dead gorgeous. Every hormone in your body stands at attention. After class, this vision asks you for help in some of the classwork and wonders if you can schedule a one-on-one study session.

Of course you would like to help, but you have three lab assignments, two term papers, and a lot of laundry to do, so you have to turn down the offer. That’s too bad, for you might have had a chance to experience some true student interaction.

You’re tired, you’re miserable, you have no significant other, and you’re catching heat from home (you never had time to really apologize to Mom for yelling at her). But somehow, you made it. You graduate with a 2.9 GPA in only three and a half years.

Now you’re in the real world.

That’s when the nerves breakdown start. If you think college is a grind, wait until you have to work.The real world will be there for you; it’s a patient beast. If you need more classes, try spreading them out over the summer semesters.

Over twelve hours a day nonstop for an unaccaring, unforgiving boss. It’ll make your past college life enjoyable by comparison.

The point I’m trying to make is: don’t burn yourself out in college. Take things easy. The real world will be there for you; it’s a patient beast. If you need more classes, try spreading them out over the summer semesters.

Above all, take time to relax. Hang out with your friends. Join that special someone in that one-one-one study session. Take time to smell the roses.

Besides, who wants to hire someone who can’t relax?

As a pedestrian, I have seen my life flash before my eyes several times during close encounters with automobiles. The reasons for the encounters were not earth-shattering. The driver either was in a hurry and tried to speed past me before I could cross the street, nearly hitting me, or the driver was waving at a friend and didn’t notice that I was standing in the middle of the street before he decided to take off.

I am not the only one who has these types of complaints. Several of my friends and acquaintances have told me about similar incidents when they felt that death was only a millimeter away.

I’m not saying that driving is bad. If circumstances were different, I would probably be driving to class every day myself. I just think that there are certain things drivers and pedestrians owe to each other. Consider the following:

First, motorists owe it to pedestrians to pay attention. I admit that while walking my mind sometimes wanders. However, for me to run into another pedestrian is, although quite embarrassing, less harmful than for the driver of an automobile whose mind is wandering to run into another automobile or into a pedestrian.

Drivers sometimes forget that they are controlling a machine that could crush a pedestrian with little difficulty. Pedestrians realize this fact very quickly when a motorist in his own little world speeds toward them in the middle of the street.

Drivers, also owe it to pedestrians to stop, not just at traffic lights, but at all crossings where there are pedestrians. Traffic laws state that pedestrians have the right of way, but there’s not much chance of getting caught if a driver doesn’t give it to them. Therefore, stopping becomes a matter of fairness.

The average non-athlete walks about 3 or maybe 4 miles per hour. Thus, drivers, even when travelling at a snail’s pace, move many miles per hour faster than pedestrians.

Also, pedestrians are physically exerting themselves and enduring the elements. The motorist is sitting in his or her car, protected from the bitter cold and pouring rain, performing as little strenuous activity as possible. It is only just that the driver, out of common human decency, stop for a few seconds and allow the person travelling on foot to cross the street.

In return for the common courtesy of the motorist, the pedestrian owes it to them to move across the street with reasonable speed.

He or she should not repay the driver’s kindness by walking as slowly as possible or stopping to tie a shoelace in the middle of traffic. An action such as this may cause the driver to decide never to stop for a pedestrian again, bringing possible danger to those of us who may encounter that driver in the future.

The easiest way for both drivers and pedestrians to decide their best course of action is to put themselves in the other’s position.

Pedestrians should remember that the driver who has stopped for them may be in a hurry even if they’re not. Motorists should remember that it could be them running in the pouring rain to get to their 8.45. With a little common sense and basic respect for one another, we can make the streets safer and still get to class on time.
Some students have voiced their opinion about the Chanticleer's "Question of the Week": What is your answer to the parking hassle here at JSU? Almost any student at JSU will agree that hunting a parking space is just about the worst part of a student's day. On some more congested days, cars are parked EVERYWHERE! The closest parking space may be a block away, and down a hill.

Some students have suggested ways to solve this problem, and I do mean PROBLEM. Some suggested walking, which would not be a problem unless you are a student who lives over 15 miles away, has to commute, to be at your next class on the opposite end of campus 15 minutes after the first class, or has a health problem that restricts you from walking long distances. This solution is obviously not for everyone, but can work for some students: those without a car, those needing a little exercise, and those without a tight class schedule.

Another option that students are mentioning is a new parking lot. As one lady stated, using LESS cars would be "better for the campus environment." So more parking lots would mean, first of all, expense. I am not so sure students are willing to pay more tuition or pay whatever other fee could be placed on the students to build more parking lots. Next, more parking lots would mean a less attractive environment for the campus.

Therefore, I propose that the student government encourage the school to install a bus/trolley (or multi-bus/trolley) system. A student could work as a driver, mechanic, etc. This would provide transportation for many students on campus, especially those without a car. This would make the campus a much less congested area. Second, one automobile would be much better for the environment than many other automobiles. Also, students could save money on gasoline and students would be able to "save the grass!"

Also, if students were to find themselves suddenly needing a ride because their ride left, they were drinking, or their car broke down, there would be a safe alternate way to get home.

I am very interested in knowing other student's points of view on the parking hassle at JSU, so PLEASE write the Chanticleer and let everyone know how you see it!

Marcia Ryan, CS Major, Junior

Mr. Hopkin,

I am a Phi Mu Alpha Brother and also a member of the marching Southerners. I read the Chanticleer weekly, and until these past couple of weeks, I was pleased with the product. My main complaint about your articles is, there was no need for them to be printed. A simple write up in the crime docket would have been plenty. The article I felt slandered two of the most productive organizations on this campus. Why was there not anything said about how the party was an outlet after a full 10 days of 8:30 am-10:30 pm rehearsals to produce a marching show to entertain thousands of people? Why was there not anything said about the Drum and Bugle Corps Show, sponsored by Phi Mu Alpha and the Marching Southerners? This 4 hour even brought in more people than any football game last year. Why was there nothing mentioned about the Band Day, sponsored by Phi Mu Alpha, which brought over 400 high school students to the campus, all leaving with JSU first on their minds for a college?

I really think that before you print such articles in your paper, you should first look at what the organization does for this University, and what articles such as the two printed can do to their reputations!

Hopefully, in the future, there will be positive articles about the Marching Southerners, and Phi Mu Alpha printed in your paper rather than the negative ones!

Now is the time to Act, funding for higher education in the state of Alabama has reached critically low levels. The effects of the major cuts it received three years ago are now at dangerous levels for all public universities in Alabama. Your Student government Association is an active advocate for your desire to receive a quality education without heavy financial strain. Without a change the desire could be at risk.

Last Monday night, the Student Senate passed Resolution 1 at its first meeting making it the first order of business this year. This is to signify the importance in this situation and the Student Government Association's dedication to the cause. There are roughly fifty people who hold office in the SGA, but every student at Jacksonville State University is a member. In order to be heard at a state level we need these students to join in our fight. The resolution stated that the SGA committed itself to support the Higher Education Partnership. The Partnership (located in Montgomery) is an organized state wide advocate for higher education. I believe that this organization can make a difference in communicating the importance of higher education to the people of Alabama and its leaders.

Ask for your help, we too can make a difference. If you would like to help please contact Chris Glover in the Student Government Association office.

Sincerely,

Chris Glover, President, Student Government Association

To boldly go: where it counts—the restrooms

by Tim Lockette and Buffy Smith

Features writers

Americans judge a civilization by its bathrooms. Europeans abroad will talk at length about the art and culture of the countries they visit; Americans talk about the best places to go. "They had really nice ones in the Louvre," we say. A detached observer might think we go overseas merely to seek out the cleanest place, and do our business there.

Even at home, it—you know, it—is one of our favorite things to circulate. Rumors circulate, horror stories of third-world lavatories right here in the richest country in the world.

So how do our local bathrooms shape up? To find out, The Chanticleer sent Tim Lockette and Buffy Smith to seek out the the scatological Grail.

*Jon & Jan's "Washeteria"—We sought out Jon & Jan's on a rumor that it was truly nasty—what we found instead was a nice, serviceable little cubicle without any soap. "These college kids come in here at night and steal it," said the woman who owns the place. "When they run out of toilet paper, they just come over here and take ours."

*Starmart—"Elvises" and "Aliens" or something. People will talk; don't say we didn't warn you.

"I think for the first time how do you tasteful little condom machine, the things here from Brother's and "Elvises" or "Aliens" or something. People will talk; don't say we didn't warn you.

*Jefferson's — The "Where's Waldo" of graffiti. Paranoid people can come to these bathrooms to find threats against themselves written on the walls. There's so much written here that the walls have become a sort of verbal inkblot.

*BP — Welcome to Camp British Petroleum! Something about this place reminds us of long childhood trudges from darkened tents to Park Service bathrooms. We hate to Dickinsonian, but the ever-so-light scent of urine enhances the effect.

There is such a thing as karma, people: and where toilet paper is concerned, karma is hell. Every roll you steal will come back to you when you least expect it.

*Roma's — This homey, well-supplied little pair of rooms made us think for the first time: how do you get here in a wheelchair? Lovers of privacy will enjoy being set off from the crowd by the mini-labyrinth which leads to—well, back there—but Roma's is not handicapped-accessible.

All of which is not to say that they aren't nice folks up here. In fact, the only wheelchair-accessible bathroom in town can be found in the chain restaurants. This could lead to some innovative forms of protest.

*Village Inn—This lavatory isn't just inaccessible. Everybody else said, "Go ahead, y'all, it's a public bathroom." but the Village Inn requires you to speak to the manager first. You'd think the doors were labeled "Elvises" and "Aliens" or something. People will talk; don't say we didn't warn you.

"Men" and "Me." One reviewer felt these were "Cold and clammy," and both agree that it's a bit weird to have to wash your hands in a little hallway outside the actual bathroom. There's next stuff in the

"Every roll you steal will come back to you when you least expect it."

The photo for this one is so disgusting, we're not allowed to publish the thing. If you want to see it, come by the Chanticleer office; we'll be glad to show it to you.

The plot is simple. You play Kurt Havoc, a young man who gets dragged into space by a loony professor to study a natural occurrence that doesn’t exist. While you’re in space, a large electromagnetic beam crashes into the earth, bearing a fleet of aliens bent on strip-mining the planet. The doctor decides this disaster is the perfect time to test some of his inventions.

You get some rather interesting weaponry and armor, re-enter the earth’s atmosphere, land on the massive minecrawler crafts, kill the occupants, and defeat the driver of each craft.

The only help you get is from a specially designed dog, Max, who gives you added weaponry and gets you off of the mine craft after your work is done.

This game is a treat. You have a huge playing area and plenty of interesting reactions from your opponents. This game also has a very strong sense of humor, which keeps it flowing and preventing it from becoming too dull or plain gory.

One of the game’s selling points is the sniper mode, which allows you to zoom more than a mile on selected targets. This lets you pick off opponents at a great distance with (relative) ease.

This game is not a mere Doom rip-off. The designers weave a tough strategy into the game, some aspects of which nearly forced me to go to a web page and get help on a puzzle. The idea of simply running amok with your guns blazing will not get you past the first few levels.

The only real complaint that I have is that the game is too short. By the time I thought I had reached the midway point, the ending movie started playing. Otherwise, this is an excellent game.

Gamecocks win fourth quarter thriller

by Shannon Fagan
Sports editor

After losing a heart-breaking season opener last week, the Jacksonville State Gamecocks found redemption when they traveled to Huntsville, Texas to face Sam Houston State. It was deja-vu all over again as the game was decided in the final minute. Only this time the Gamecocks prevailed. They defeated the Bearkats in dramatic fashion by the final of 28-21.

"I thought our defense was more physical. Offensively, we played well. We cut down on our penalties and turnovers and our special teams did a better job this week," Coach Williams said after the game.

In the first quarter, the Gamecocks took control early. Quarterback Montressa Kirby hit receiver Joe Hamilton on a 16-yard pass that resulted in a touchdown. Brad Prince's extra point gave Jacksonville State a 7-0 advantage. It didn't take long for the Bearkats to answer. In the first quarter, the Gamecocks took control early. It didn't take long for the Bearkats to answer.

Running back Elmor Armstrong bulldozed his way through Gamecock defenders all night. He scored on a one-yard run to get Sam Houston State on the board. The point after tied the score at seven. The Gamecocks' quick-strike offense took the lead back at the end of the quarter. Jax State only needed three plays to go 65 yards, resulting in Michael Dales' three-yard scamper into the end zone. The extra point gave the Gamecocks a 14-7 lead.

Both teams tightened up on defense in the second quarter. It looked as if the Gamecocks would take their lead into halftime, but the Bearkats put together a scoring drive. The end result was a touchdown with 3:53 left to play in the first half. The extra point was successful, deadlocking the teams at 14. Sam Houston State would take the lead in the third quarter. Elmor Armstrong found daylight once again for his second touchdown of the night. James Drummer's kick was good as the Bearkats took a 21-14 lead. The Gamecocks couldn't put any type of scoring drive together and trailed at the end of three quarters.

Jacksonville State's offense exploded in the fourth quarter. Kirby and the comeback kids marched 55 yards on ten plays to tie the game. Receiver Ronald Bonner had a magnificent "Offensively, we played well. We cut down on our penalties and turnovers and our special teams did a better job this week."

--Coach Mike Williams

night. Bonner bailed in a nine-yard touchdown pass with 13:19 left to draw Jax State even. The Kirby-to-Bonner connection wasn't through. With time running out, the two players hooked up once again for the game-winning touchdown. Kirby found Bonner on a 13-yard pass with 49 seconds left to play. Jacksonville State's defense slammed the door on the Bearkats to preserve head coach Mike Williams' first win.

Williams gives a lot of credit to his assistant coaches for the win. "Our assistant coaches put in a lot of hard work for this win," says Williams.

For the game, Kirby finished with 28 completions for 335 yards. He was once again named Offensive Player of the Week. Montressa is now the single-game record holder for passes attempted and completed. He also holds the record for the longest touchdown pass and most touchdown passes in a game.

Bonner had 12 receptions for 139 yards and two touchdowns. He has been Kirby's favorite target of the season. He is averaging 114 yards-per-game and leads the Gamecocks in scoring with four touchdown receptions.

After their dramatic win, the Division I-AA poll voters seemed to be impressed with the Gamecocks. Jacksonville State is now receiving votes to be included in the Division I-AA rankings. The Gamecocks travel to Legion Field on Saturday to face the UAB Blazers.

Gamecocks hope to build on last week's win

by Will Roe

Now that the Gamecocks have their first win of the season, it's back out of SFL conference play and into Legion Field for Saturday's match-up with Division I-A rival UAB. Jacksonville State hopes to bring as much offense to Legion Field as Peyton Manning did the last time he led the Tennessee passing attack there in 1995, when Tennessee beat Alabama 41-14.

Going into the Sam Houston State game, the Gamecocks knew that they would have to cut back on turnovers, play better defense, and have a good special teams' performance. They did just that. The end result was the 28-21 win, the first Southland Football League win for Jacksonville State.

Now, the Gamecocks prepare for a UAB team that is literally banged up. The main injury was that of starting running back Carl Sanders. Last season, the Gamecocks could not bring him down. Sanders rushed for an average of six yards-per-carry against the Gamecocks adding up to 138 total yards.

UAB's quarterback, Lee Jolly, is just starting the fourth game of his career. Combining his lack of experience with the injuries to the offensive line could spell trouble for the offense. The Blazers are averaging just 200 total yards-per-game on offense, while Jacksonville State is averaging 492 yards. That is what is scary about this game.

The Blazer defense has played well at times against fellow Division I-A opponents. The most points scored against the team this season is 28, scored by the Memphis Tigers. The success in the defense has come against the passing game. The Blazers are giving up an average of 162 yards-per-game in the air and 226 yards rushing. UAB is playing in their first home game after returning from Arizona, where they lost 24-10.

If Jacksonville State is to return home Saturday night with their second victory, they will have to be able to use the momentum from Saturday's win to their advantage. Still, the Gamecocks must cut back on those nagging mistakes that could turn big in a game like this. One would wonder if the Gamecock coaching staff would want to get more of a rushing attack going. The Gamecocks are averaging just over 100 yards rushing per game, and all of the "game-plays" have come from the passing attack.

Once again, quarterback Montressa Kirby enters Saturday's game with SFL Player of the Week honors. His assault on the JSU record book has been remarkable this season, something that Gamecock fans have not seen since the early 1980's and JSU Hall of Famer Ed Lett. If Kirby breaks many more records, his name will be up there with Lett.

As usual, expect a great crowd of Gamecock fans at Legion Field. Kickoff for the game will be at six p.m.

Volleyball places second

by Rusty Reid
Sports Writer

The JSU volleyball team traveled to Mercer this weekend for the Mercer University Quad Volleyball Tournament. The tournament included Western Carolina, Stetson, and the host team Mercer.

The Lady Gamecocks, who had lost three straight games, were defeated in their first game by Mercer in four sets 12-15, 14-16, 15-8, and 15-17. The team managed to regroup and win their next two games against Stetson (15-6,13-15, 15-8, 15-5) and Western Carolina (15-13, 13-9, 15-6) to place second behind Mercer. With those wins the Lady Gamecocks improved their record to 5-4 overall.

Two ladies from the team were named to the All-Tournament Team. Amy Reaves is among team leaders with 2.49 kills per game. She was joined by Jessica Pohl who leads the team with 220 assists.
