Audit finds possible financial impropriety

From news reports

Jacksonville State University’s College of Commerce and Business in a recent audit by the State Department of Examiners of Public Accounts was found to be in violation of financial practices, university policy and federal guidelines over its connections with a not-for-profit organization.

The report was released November 26.

A story in a recent edition of The Anniston Star said that two employees, JSU employee Pat Shaddix was overpaid by $1,369.71 and that the college’s dean, Bill Fielding, signed contracts with a non-profit while serving on its board. Fielding denied being on that board.

It also stated that Shaddix, Fielding and other departmental employees together received a total of more than $150,000 in “extra compensation” between October 2004 and February of this year.

Shaddix was charged for the money that was overpaid, and had reimbursed the state in full by the time the report was issued. He said the amount grew over time due to miscalculations in money he was owed for leave.

“It was an oversight,” Shaddix said.

In the article, Fielding said he never served on the board for the Alabama Small Business Institute of Commerce, the not-for-profit he reportedly signed a contract with in the amount of $95,600 in 2005.

He said the institute asked him to serve on its board and even listed him as a member at one of its meetings, but said that he never accepted.

Shoe box program sends message of hope, charity

From staff reports

Shoe boxes. Shoe boxes. The word nor the object may not be of any significance to you, but by some worthy cause, the perception of the meaningless cardboard your closet becomes a lifeline.

It's called the Guatemala Shoe Box Program.

And for children in Guatemala, that shoe box has become a lifer.

Ten years ago, Dr. George Lauderbaugh, Phi Theta Alpha, and several of Dr. Lauderbaugh's colleagues discovered and explored this program.

The Guatemala Shoe Box Program is a program headed by the Program of Alabama-Guatemala Partners in the Americas, which started in 1967.

What they do is simple: If you fill an empty shoe box with common essentials and small children's toys, such as toothpaste, combs, soap, washcloths, yo-yos, harmonicas, dolls, slinky, or art supplies, the items will be gift wrapped and taken to impoverished and remote villages in Guatemala.

The items will be issued by Guatemalan officials.

During the first they participated in the event, Dr. Lauderbaugh and his colleagues sent 50 boxes of items. Ten years later, the group has sent 450 boxes and raised $1,200 to help cover expenses.

But they did not do it alone. They encouraged community and scholastic participation.

Groups such as Phi Alpha Theta, Rotaract, the JSU Athletics Department, Sacred Heart Catholic Church and other local churches answered the call to help.

Individual donors include Homer Wilson, a retired space engineer with NASA. Last year, he sent 5,000 boxes filled with items to help support the program and paid all the expenses.

Dr. Lauderbaugh spoke with pride as he mentioned all the partners involved with the program.

"Times as tough here," he said, "but not nearly as tough as they are in Guatemala everyday. We truly appreciate the campus and community for supporting this program."

JSU HAPPENINGS

CAMPUS GROUPS BEGIN TOY, FOOD CHARITY DRIVES

As we head into the holiday season, we have many reasons to feel blessed. Unlike many, we have an extensive campus community of friends, mentors and coworkers who support us when we need it. But many are not as fortunate this year. Some have lost jobs, some have lost homes, and some community who are not as fortunate.

A number of campus organizations and groups are conducting food and toy drives this holiday. Please consider them when you plan your holiday giving. To recap some of the opportunities:

Guatemala Shoebox Program

Brazilian Drug Lords LOVE Justin Bieber!

...Well, at least one does!

Yesterday, a massive swarm of 2,600 police and army operatives seized 11 tons of marijuana and a "small arsenal" of weapons from a Brazilian drug gang. They also found an oversized Justin Bieber mural.

Pezao, who is known as "one of the area's top traffickers," is apparently also a serious Justin Bieber enthusiast!

If this drug lord ends up behind bars, we wonder if they'll let him bring his prized mural of the Biebs with him.

Do U see anything strange down dozens of media requests because they were worried what he might say. Wagner could say anything at any time so it looked like an accident waiting to happen. They spent the day giving him advice so that when he does speak he won't damage the show's image. He was effectively gagged. No other contestant had this treatment this series.

LOL! You'd think that they would have thought about that during his time on the show and prepared him then!

C'mon, guys! Let him loose!

In the end she hung up - as did her mother and father. But then she phoned and said, 'Hi Grandma, I just phoned you to tell you I love you.' And I said, 'Katie, I love you too.' Do I think I've let Katie down? No, I don't think so at all. If anything she's let me down. The family released a statement saying that they want to disassociate themselves from me. I don't think they're being very sensible about it, but if that's what they want to do, then fine. I find it very hard. I have the right to live my life the way I want to, but it's sad we can't discuss it as grown-ups. If they're not going to accept me for what I am, I'm not going to say sorry. It's still very raw and I understand it was a shock. I'd like to think they can come back.
have an extensive campus community of friends, mentors and coworkers who support us when we need it. But many are not as fortunate this year. Some have lost jobs, some have lost homes, and some have simply lost hope.

Before we gather to light up the campus and share in all the other festivities of the season, we should look around and search out ways to help those in need.

Holidays should be about people, not consumerism

By Andrew Lacy
Daily Nebraskan, U. Nebraska via UWIRE

If there’s one thing I’ve learned from my time working in retail, it’s this: Santa Claus is the anti-Christ.

While many students were at home spending Thanksgiving with their families, I was still in Lincoln, 400 miles from home. I do have some family here, so I wasn’t alone, but it’s kind of like dancing with someone else’s wife. It works OK, but it’s just not the same. In three and a half years at college, it’s the first time I’ve experienced even a hint of homesickness.

And why was I here? Because I had to be to work at a place that didn’t open anyway. One of my co-workers summed it up pretty well when he greeted me on Friday by saying, “Happy screwed-up American priorities day.” It’s enough to make me want to punt a baby penguin.

And these were the same ones. I was fortunate enough to work at a place that didn’t open until 7. I feel sorry for the people who work at places like Wal-Mart or Target and had to be to work ridiculously early. Have people lost their minds?

I don’t fault the stores. They’re just trying to make money to get into the black for the year. Major sales are simply a way to reach that goal. They need to buy.

I fail to see how spending money faster than the Obama administration honors a humble carpenter who was born in a stable and never in his life cared about wealth or material possessions.

A fat man in a red suit can hardly measure up to the gifts given to us by a child lying in a manger. Christmas isn’t about packages wrapped in paper; it’s about a baby wrapped in swaddling clothes.

Don’t get me wrong. I’m not necessarily saying people should just stop buying stuff for Christmas.

The economy would be in even bigger trouble if people completely stopped spending money at the time of year that often makes or breaks retail businesses. But that should be a secondary concern. Spending time with the people you love is far more important.

If you don’t get someone the perfect gift, it isn’t the end of the world. Their feelings about you shouldn’t be swayed by that. My best friend is taking me to an Avalanche/Red Wings game two days after Christmas. It’s a great gift and will be my first NHL game, but I’m not looking forward to it because I want to go to a hockey game. I’m looking forward to it because I’ll be spending that time with her. That’s a far greater gift than anything someone could buy for me.

Stop worrying so much about buying presents, and worry more about the only thing that matters: the people you love.

Wiki ‘leaks’ rip veil of secret communications

By Mike Munzenrider
Minnesota Daily, U. Minnesota via UWIRE

In what might be the overstatement of the year, responding to this weekend’s release of over 250,000 U.S. diplomatic cables by WikiLeaks, Italian Foreign Minister Franco Frattini called the leak the “Sept. 11 of world diplomacy.” He meant it in a way that the ground rules of diplomacy had been fundamentally changed; however, even in that context his statement seems more like posturing than actual sentiment.

If anything, WikiLeaks’ latest release is a departure from such posturing. It’s torn back the curtain on usually secret communications and shown the real sentiments of the U.S. diplomatic corps.

Whether one agrees with the means of such a disclosure — and it is not difficult to have problems with WikiLeaks’ tactics — the document dump is comforting because it reveals the frank, sane and reality-based thinking that goes on behind-the-scenes diplomatically.

For those disconnected from the news over the holiday weekend, the WikiLeaks story is quite similar to those of the past. Giving warning to the U.S. government of the imminent release of secret documents, WikiLeaks contacted newspapers internationally for advanced disclosure of the cables. Stateside, The New York Times broke the story.

The diplomatic cables released represent the day-to-day communications from more than 270 embassies and consulates from around the world, back to Washington D.C.

As alluded to, and expected, the diplomatic establishment is not taking kindly to the leak. Speaking for the U.S. government, Secretary of State Hillary Clinton gave the statement, “We condemn in the strongest terms the unauthorized disclosure of classified documents and sensitive national security information.”

The reporting of the leaks is ongoing, as information is being made public incrementally.

What’s been revealed thus far, though classified, is strikingly mundane and same, and can be comforting in an otherwise black and white world.

For instance, the cables revealed that the U.S. and South Korea have had talks regarding the reunification of the Korean Peninsula if and when the economy of North Korea collapses.

It’s difficult to believe that such a prospect would be a surprise to many and it’s pleasing to learn that such a treatment of a former member of the “Axis of Evil” was ever considered.

I don't fault the stores. They're just trying to make money to get into the black for the year. Major sales are simply a way to reach that goal. It's the consumers who are the problem. Do these people really think they have nothing better to do than stand in line the night of Thanksgiving so they can buy a new TV? Personally, I consider sleep to be much more important. I guess I'm just weird.

But it's not like this is anything new. Christmas has been completely stripped of its meaning for years in favor of rampant consumerism. The real significance of the holiday is pushed aside and, for the most part, just gets lip service. People may put up a nativity set in their homes, but then they become preoccupied with what forward to it because I want to go to a hockey game. I'm looking forward to it because I'll be spending that time with her. That's a far greater gift than anything someone could buy for me.

Stop worrying so much about buying presents, and worry more about the only thing people can give each other that actually matters: love. Family, friends, spouses, significant others. These are the things that matter, not that 40-inch plasma TV you trampled three people and punched an old lady to get for half price. Those are the things I'll be thinking about while I'm at work for a pointless extra hour when there won't be any customers anyway.

Could chocolate milk be the next ultimate energy drink?

By Kathryn Doeneka

Chocolate milk, a beverage commonly consumed by children, is now being used as a sports recovery drink for people of all ages. Karp, Johnston, Tecklenburg, Mickleborough, Fly and Stager (2006) established that it can help to rehydrate the body and rebuild muscles during and after workouts or athletic events. Maybe that is not surprising, because the contents of chocolate milk include carbohydrates, protein, vitamin A, vitamin D and calcium, all of which contribute to rebuilding muscle. Also present are sodium and sugar, which help stabilize and restore the body’s electrolyte balance.

By contrast, energy drinks, which are popular among youth and some active people, contain large amounts of caffeine and sugar, along with ingredients such as taurine, guarana, ginseng, green tea and vitamins.

So, which is better for refueling the body after a workout: chocolate milk or energy drinks? Two recent studies have addressed this question.

Thomas, Morris and Stevenson (2009) showed the difference between chocolate milk and two other replacement drinks (fluid and carbohydrate energy drinks) when consumed by nine well-trained male bicyclists before and during low to moderate exercise. In the study, “participants cycled 51 percent and 43 percent longer after ingesting chocolate milk than after ingesting carbohydrate replacement drink and fluid replacement drink, respectively” (p. 81).

Pritchett, Bishop, Pritchett, Green and Katica (2009) compared chocolate milk and a similar carbohydrate replacement beverage among 10 well-trained male bicyclists before and during high intensity exercise. The only significant difference they found was a higher creatine kinase level in the carbohydrate replacement drink from the beginning to end of the trials, while the creatine kinase levels of chocolate milk remained about the same throughout.

Texting becomes new normal

By DARA BARNEY

People depend on texting too much as a communication tool. Don’t get me wrong, I admit that I do it too, but when texting becomes the whole communication toolbox as opposed to maybe the hammer or wrench, it might be an unhealthy dependence.
MOVIE REVIEW

‘Q&A: TANGLED’

UWIRE

It's 3 p.m. on a Saturday and I’m standing outside a room in the Sè San Diego Hotel. The elevator has deposited a PR rep, three other writers and myself on the 18th floor of the posh downtown establishment.

I’m here to interview “Chuck” star Zachary Levi and actress / former teen pop sensation Mandy Moore about their parts in the new Disney film, “Tangled,” but with my recorder prepped and my questions written, all I can concentrate on is who ordered the untouched green salad sitting grimly on the room service cart.

Suddenly, there is shifting in the room to my left. The voices get louder and thank-you-goodbyes are exchanged. An older man, presumably a reviewer for a paper more important than the one I represent, emerges from the room, notepad in hand. He looks at me and says, “You’ll like them. They’re very friendly.”

I nod, smile and wait for the other reporters to be ushered in before I follow. I’ve got a seasonal sore throat and I’m worried the actors might want to shake my hand. God forbid I be the one to give Mandy Moore, my childhood idol, a cold.

My fear is squashed when Levi introduces himself by offering a fist bump and an explanation that he’s sick. I take silent, personal delight that we are simultaneously ill and offer my knuckles, Ditto to Moore.

Levi is unexpectedly charming and charismatic while Moore, with a genuine grin permanently affixed to her blushed face, is a living embodiment of sunshine — the ideal Disney princess.

The Daily Aztec: Is “Tangled” a story that will appeal to both boys and girls?

Zachary Levi: Absolutely, I think that is one of the things Disney set out to accomplish. They’ve had a lot of success in the “princess” world and a lot of those movies appeal to boys as well. I mean, I was a little boy and I watched all of them, I don’t know what that means. They wanted a movie that was equilateral. Yes, you have this princess character, but it’s a fresh take on it. It’s an adventure movie at heart.

DA: What lessons do you think college students could learn from “Tangled”?

Mandy Moore: I like the idea of never questioning that...

Lady Gamecocks drop fourth-straight game

From wire reports

DeLand, Fla.—Jacksonville State’s women’s basketball team dropped its fourth-straight game with a 70-52 setback to Stetson University on Monday evening on the SU campus.

JSU falls to 2-4 on the season, while the Hatters improve their season’s mark to 2-3. The Gamecocks will return home on Saturday, Dec. 4 to open their Ohio Valley Conference season against Tennessee Tech. Tip off is set for 5:15 p.m.

After a slow start to the contest by Jax State with a 19-point opening period, it fought its way back into the contest midway through the second half. After trailing 32-19 at the intermission and as many as 18 points at 50-32 at the 11:10 mark, the Red and White strung together a 12-2 scoring spurt to trim the Hatter lead down to eight points at 52-44, but that would be as close as the Gamecocks would get.

Late season upset sets record straight

By AUSTIN FAULKNER
Sports Columnist

With the season drawing to a close, I have coughed up some of my previously swallowed pride by choosing a late season upset correctly for a change.

When the Bayou Bengals of LSU rolled up to War Memorial Stadium in Little Rock, Arkansas, they did not expect the shootout that was to ensue. Both teams were in the top fifteen. Both were fighting to better position themselves behind SEC West champion Auburn. Only one could take the number two slot and both were determined to claim it. Arkansas had the better team and proved it, behind the arm of quarterback Ryan Mallett, who shone as he threw for a dominating 320 yards, three touchdowns and two interceptions against one of the SEC’s premiere defenses.

Between my other four picks, I broke even, making this week’s record 3-2. I chose Texas A&M to beat Texas and Auburn to beat Alabama which occurred, while my two other picks, Michigan and Oklahoma State, fell short of beating their rivals, Ohio State and Oklahoma respectively.
By AUSTIN FAULKNER
Sports Columnist

Jacksonville State earned a first round bye in the playoffs during Thanksgiving weekend. You could not tell if you were on campus.

The Gamecocks practiced on Monday, Tuesday and Wednesday morning before going home and returning to practice on Saturday and Sunday.

After losing to EKU following a bye week, the extra effort is seen as a precautionary measure.

JSU gets the honor of hosting its first playoff opponent, the Wofford Terriers.

The Terriers will probably be the most unique defense the Gamecocks defense has faced this season. Wofford runs the Triple Option.

The key characteristic of this offense is the quarterback has the choice of handing the ball off to the fullback, a halfback, keep it himself or, in some cases, pass it.

Though the JSU squad has not faced a pure Triple Option attack this season, they have seen aspects of it in other offenses.

Wofford’s defense is a base 3-4 scheme and Montreal native defensive end Ameet Pall leads the charge. With 19.5 tackles for loss and 12.5 sacks, the best place to find Pall is in the offensive backfield.

The 3-4 scheme is known for its complex zone blitzes that allow the defense to get sacks by confusing the offensive line.

The Gamecocks will be tested both physically and mentally on both sides of the ball with the specialized attacks that the Terriers bring to the field. With the extra week to prepare and the bitter taste of the Tennessee Tech game still in their mouths, look for the Gamecocks to come out motivated and ready for a heavy-weight bout. It’s the playoffs, let’s make it one to remember.

Men’s b’ball loses in Normal, Ill.

An Illinois State stretch in the middle of the game proved too much for the Jacksonville State men’s basketball team to overcome on Sunday, when the Gamecocks fell 60-47 to the Redbirds in the final game of the Global Sports Roundball Classic. The Gamecocks (2-5) controlled the tempo early and led for much of the first half, but the Redbirds (5-1) scored the final six points of the first half.

COACH JACK CROWE ON PLAYING IN THE FCS PLAYOFFS

“We are extremely happy and fortunate to be playing a home game in the playoffs, as well as finding ourselves as contenders for a national championship. We have said for quite a while that these are the traditions at Jacksonville State University. There were back-to-back playoff appearances in ’77 and ’78, and also ’80 and ’81. There were also appearances made from 1988 through 1992. We were also here in 2003 and 2004. I don’t think, even in those efforts, that we set the tone that it takes to actually be a contender in the playoffs. To attend is one thing. To contend is something else. We are approaching this as contenders.”

“People may find that the teams like Delaware or the one we’re playing this week, Wofford, are schools that we played at a lower level. This is a great beginning. It will change everything that happens afterwards. I think that we, as a team, need to learn how to make this transition. There are teams that play for the playoffs, and then there are teams who have the right mentality to play in the playoffs. We have had to go through that transition.”
