I plain to interview someone with a cultural difference, someone of Asian descent, Rajan Kumur Bhandary, you'll never guess what this name means. Believe it are not, cultural differences play a major part of our history. Many of us are from different places and have different backgrounds, which makes us all unique in some fashion or form.

The guy I am interviewing is Rajan. Rajan is from Nepal located in Asia. Being from a place other than America is definitely a difference, just his presence alone is making American history. First I'll begin with the introduction telling his name where he's from and a series of questions as follows:

- I. Tell me about your family unit what it consist of meaning , your mother her name ,your father his name if you have any brothers and sisters, and what are some of the roles that each person have.
- II. Tell me about the steps you had to follow in order to get a visa or green card or whatever procedures you had to follow, and where there any problems with the transfer to the United States.
- III. What year did you come to the states and what prompted you to move to Central Alabama?
- IV. How is the culture in Asia different in comparison to the states, such as food and housing etc...?
- V. How are the living conditions there and how are the people treated?
- VI. What type of governmental system do you have?
- VII. How have things changed since you've been away from home?
- VIII. Have you experienced any racial unjust due to you fair skin, if so explain what happened and how you handled the situation?
- IX. What is your religion and the most common religious practices in the area?
- X. Do you plan to return home if so when.
