A SIRELY VOICE OF JACOBS.

A voice along the streets of Jacksonville, and there loud and more or less inane without any cause or reason, was heard by the writer one evening last week. It was accompanied by the sound of a small horn. A man with a top hat and a walking stick was walking along the street with a pair of glasses perched on his head. He was wearing a long coat and carrying a large bundle. The man was talking to himself in a language that was not clearly audible. He then walked into a saloon and left his bundle leaning against the door. He was seen to be smoking a cigar. The voice of the man continued to be heard throughout the evening.

Narrative of a Fire on a Canoe.

The Editor.

The incident recorded below comes in the face of the public, as an object of popular interest. The facts are stated by a reliable source, and are sufficiently clear to convince the most skeptical of their truth. The occurrence took place at the beginning of the week, on the 3d of this month, on the Ohio river, near its confluence with the Allegheny. The canoe was on its way from Pittsburgh to Wheeling. It was a large vessel, well fitted for its purpose, and had a crew of four men, besides the captain and the owner of the property. The date is Tuesday, April 22, 1851.

The canoe was on fire.

The captain, who was on watch, saw the flames first. The fire had started in the engine room, and was spreading rapidly. The crew sprang into action, but it was too late. The fire had already spread to the cabins and the crew was unable to control it. The canoe was quickly filled with smoke and the men were forced to abandon it. The canoe was guided to the nearest shore and the men were saved by a passing vessel. The loss was great, but none of the crew were injured. The cause of the fire is still unknown.

The Ohio river is one of the most navigable rivers in the United States, and is a vital link in the transportation network of the country. The fire on this canoe is a reminder of the dangers that can be faced on the river, even in the most modern times.
