SPRING.

The days are short and the nights are long,
And winter thatched the very town.
But spring is coming, and soon will be
Her healthy energy anon.

The sun, with cheerful eye, beholds
The verdant earth once more aglow;
And heaven, redoubting his right,
Is clad in glory and in show.

And all the earth, with marv'ling gaze,
Beholds the beauty and the grace
Of nature's exalted state,
Nor ceasing to admire.

This Factory Boy.

In the middle of a dark night, a man named James stared at the moon through a broken window. He had been trudging through the mud for hours, trying to reach the mill where he worked. His clothes were soaked and his shoes were caked with mud.

James was a factory boy, one of the many workers who toiled long hours for low wages. He had been working at the mill for several months now, and every day he longed to escape to a better life.

The man came up behind him, a figure cloaked in darkness. James turned around, ready to fight for his life. But the figure spoke.

"Don't worry, my boy. I'm here to help you.

James hesitated, unsure of what to do. The man reached out a hand, offering help.

"Come with me, and I'll take you to a better life.

James considered his options. He had nothing to lose, and everything to gain.

"All right, then," he said, "I'll go with you.

The man led him through the darkness, promising freedom and a better life. James followed, hoping for a better tomorrow.
