A During Surveyor.

A letter recently received by one of the journals from a gentleman who had recently returned from the Missouri and Illinois states, gives us some very interesting and valuable information respecting the different branches of the land surveying business, and the state of affairs in that part of the country. The writer describes the country as being of the best description, and very productive of corn, wheat, and other crops. He also speaks highly of the climate, and says that he had never seen a more healthy and happy people. He states that the land is very cheap, and that he has been able to purchase a large number of acres at very reasonable prices. The writer also mentions that the people are very hospitable, and that he received a cordial welcome wherever he went. He concludes by saying that he is confident that the Missouri and Illinois states will ultimately become one of the greatest agricultural countries in the world.

After a long survey.
