POETRY.

One day in the middle of a war, a bold American of noble blood met him in the whirl of a battle. The days were so fast, the nights were so slow, that the sun seemed never to rise. The stars shone so bright, the moon shone so silver, that the world was a sea of light. The ocean was green, the sky was a blue, the earth was a land of flowers. The leaves were green, the flowers were red, the wind was a song. The birds were singing, the bees were buzzing, and the world was a land of music. The sun was shining, the moon was shining, and the world was a sea of light. The ocean was green, the sky was a blue, the earth was a land of flowers. The leaves were green, the flowers were red, the wind was a song. The birds were singing, the bees were buzzing, and the world was a land of music. The sun was shining, the moon was shining, and the world was a sea of light.

President Davis, at his camp near Fort Darling, has just been informed of the capture of all the enemy's trains by the Federal forces. The President is much distressed, and perhaps anxious, but he is determined to meet the situation with fortitude and courage. He has ordered the immediate mobilization of the forces, and is preparing to march against the enemy.
