New and Improved Apparatus for the Importation of Goods.

The following communication, addressed to the public in general and to the importers of goods, will be of interest to many.

New and Improved Apparatus for the Importation of Goods.

The new apparatus for the importation of goods is now in full operation at the port of New York. It is designed to facilitate the importation of goods and to increase the profits of those who are engaged in this branch of commerce. The apparatus is constructed of the finest materials and is of the most approved design. It is adapted to the requirements of the trade and is calculated to meet all the objections which are generally made against the present system of importation. The apparatus is under the superintendence of Mr. Wm. J. Clark, who has devoted many years to the study of this subject and has a thorough knowledge of the art.

CONSIDERATION.
For the proposed legislation pending now before Congress, our position is that we would not be justified in opposing, if they did not appear to be mischievous. Of course, in some cases, the influence of the public mind, and the desire of the people to be left alone, are paramount considerations. And, of course, it is possible that in some cases they may not be justiciable in the courts.

The proposed legislation, however, is in the nature of a direct personal attack upon the President, and it is impossible to escape the conclusion that it is a deliberate attempt to undermine his authority and to detach the minds of the people from the President's position.

The President's position is that of a chief executive, and it is the duty of Congress to support him, and to give him every possible aid in the discharge of his duties. The President's position is not a personal one, but a public one, and it is the duty of the people to support him in his public duties, and not to seek to undermine his position by personal attacks.

The President's position is not one of private rights, but of public duties, and it is the duty of Congress to support him in the discharge of his public duties, and not to seek to undermine his position by personal attacks.

The President's position is not one of personal advantage, but of public service, and it is the duty of the people to support him in the discharge of his public duties, and not to seek to undermine his position by personal attacks.

The President's position is not one of private interest, but of public welfare, and it is the duty of Congress to support him in the discharge of his public duties, and not to seek to undermine his position by personal attacks.

The President's position is not one of private gain, but of public honor, and it is the duty of the people to support him in the discharge of his public duties, and not to seek to undermine his position by personal attacks.

The President's position is not one of private profit, but of public credit, and it is the duty of Congress to support him in the discharge of his public duties, and not to seek to undermine his position by personal attacks.

The President's position is not one of private power, but of public trust, and it is the duty of the people to support him in the discharge of his public duties, and not to seek to undermine his position by personal attacks.

The President's position is not one of private fortune, but of public duty, and it is the duty of Congress to support him in the discharge of his public duties, and not to seek to undermine his position by personal attacks.
