The Cotton Planter.

The Auger, watch of this, last number of the Cotton Planter, has been on our desk some days, in an unglossed and unopened state. We are sorry to say, that, in consequence of some misunderstanding, our order for the paper was not filled, and we are without any specimen of it, so that we cannot make any comment or criticism upon it, or upon the subject of the Pest and its remedies. We are not able to say whether the paper is as valuable or as unimportant as we had expected, and we must await the next number with the hope that it may be more to our satisfaction.

The Pest and its remedies are divided into three main parts: 1st, the disease; 2d, the remedies; and 3d, the remedies against the disease. The first part is devoted to the description of the disease, and the second to the remedies. The third part is devoted to the remedies against the disease, and the fourth to the remedies against the disease.

Comprehension of the disease is very important. It is not only necessary to understand the nature of the disease, but also to understand the causes which produce it. The causes of the disease are various, and they are not always clearly defined. It is, therefore, necessary to have a clear understanding of the disease, in order to be able to prevent it.

The remedies are divided into two classes: 1st, external; and 2d, internal. The external remedies are those which are applied directly to the surface of the body, and the internal remedies are those which are applied to the body in general.

The remedies against the disease are also divided into two classes: 1st, preventive; and 2d, curative. The preventive remedies are those which are applied before the disease occurs, and the curative remedies are those which are applied after the disease has occurred.

The Pest and its remedies is, therefore, a very important work, and we hope that it will be of great service to the public.

The Southern Critic.

We have received a copy of the Southern Critic, which is published at Washington, D.C. It is a most interesting and instructive publication, and we shall be glad to give it our attention in future.
