Unabstracted from the New York Daily Tribune.

The Peace of Paris, an historic and succinct chronicle of the most blotted page in the history of mankind, has been appeared in the New York Daily Tribune. It was written by a devoted admirer of the French revolution, who, with a spirit of generous candor, has carefully reviewed all the transactions of Napoleon, and has pronounced his own judgment upon the events of his life. The work is a most interesting and valuable addition to the literature of the day, and we shall be happy to have it in our possession.

The Peace of Paris, a novel, by John G. Whittier, has been published. It is a story of the American Revolution, and is written with great force and spirit. The author has taken the proper occasion to introduce the characters of the war, and has given a picture of the events that occurred during the struggle. The book is well written, and is highly recommended to the attention of those who are interested in the history of the United States.

The Peace of Paris, a political pamphlet, by J. H. Smith, has been published. It is a defense of the American position in the war, and is written with great force and spirit. The author has taken the proper occasion to introduce the characters of the war, and has given a picture of the events that occurred during the struggle. The book is well written, and is highly recommended to the attention of those who are interested in the history of the United States.
