The Election.

The election of 1860 was a crisis in the political life of the country. It was the last great struggle between the two great parties, the Whigs and the Democrats. The Whigs were divided into two wings, the Conscience Whigs and the Conscience Democrats. The Conscience Whigs were opposed to the doctrine of a Union of States, and the Conscience Democrats were opposed to the doctrine of a Union of States.

A regular convention of the United Grand Lodge of Maine, to sit for the first time, was held at the capitol, in Augusta, on the 7th of July, 1820. The following is a list of the names of the members of the Grand Lodge who were present at the opening:

[Names of members]

The Grand Lodge is composed of a grand master, a grand warden, and a grand treasurer, with their respective officers. The grand master is the highest officer in the lodge, and has the power to grant charters to new lodges, and to dissolve those that do not conform to the rules of the society. The grand warden is the second officer, and has the power to visit the lodges and to examine their officers. The grand treasurer is the third officer, and has the power to receive and disburse the money of the lodge.

In the last week of July, a fire broke out in the Grand Lodge building, which was completely destroyed. Fortunately, no one was injured, but the loss was great. The Grand Lodge is now in the process of raising funds to rebuild the building. The community is rallying around to support this effort, and donations are welcome.
