MARCH
GER DIBER, T. Co., Gentlemen,

This firm has reached the 30th year of its operation, and we are pleased to have the following report of our account:

Balance on 30th day of June: $250.00

During the year, we have sold the following:

- 100 shares of stock in the new fruit company
- 50 shares of stock in the railroad company
- 20 shares of stock in the manufacturing company

We anticipate a profitable year and shall continue to operate with the same energy and efficiency as in the past.

Respectfully,

T. Co., Gentlemen
The Republican Policy in Congress.

By the Collector of Customs.

In the spring, when the Washington saloon was a hotbed of Republicanism, the Republican party was the most powerful force in the nation. The people were demanding more and better representation in Congress, and the party was determined to provide it.

In the fall, the Republicans were successful in gaining control of both houses of Congress. The party's leadership was confident that they would be able to pass legislation that would benefit the people of the country.

The Republicans were determined to make the government work for the people, and they were determined to do it in a way that would not be criticized. They were determined to be honest and fair in their dealings with the public, and they were determined to be efficient and effective in their work.

The Republicans were also determined to be strong in their opposition to the Democratic party. They were determined to show the people that the Republican party was the party of the people, and that the Democratic party was the party of the rich.

The Republicans were determined to be strong in their support of the Union, and they were determined to do it in a way that would not be criticized. They were determined to be honest and fair in their dealings with the public, and they were determined to be efficient and effective in their work.

The Republicans were also determined to be strong in their opposition to the Democrats. They were determined to show the people that the Republican party was the party of the people, and that the Democratic party was the party of the rich.

The Republicans were determined to be strong in their support of the Union, and they were determined to do it in a way that would not be criticized. They were determined to be honest and fair in their dealings with the public, and they were determined to be efficient and effective in their work.
