The New York Times of the 11th reports the capture of Pensacola, Florida.

Pensacola, Florida, November 10.

The Federal troops, under the command of General John A. Logan, captured Pensacola, Florida, on the 9th instant. The city was occupied without resistance. The garrison, consisting of about 4,000 men, under the command of Colonel John T. Ford, capitulated.

This is a significant event in the ongoing conflict between the Union and the Confederacy. The capture of Pensacola, a strategic port city, will likely have substantial implications for the future course of the war.

The capture of Pensacola marks a significant victory for the Union. It not only secures a major port for the Union but also opens the way for further military operations in the region. The city's capture is a testament to the strength and determination of the Union forces, who have been fighting against the Confederacy for several years.

The news of the capture has立刻 triggered widespread celebrations across the Union. The victory is seen as a significant blow to the Confederacy and a boost for the Union cause.

As the news spread, people across the Union rejoiced. Flags were flown at half-mast, and bells were rung in celebration. The victory is seen as a turning point in the war, and it has set the stage for further military operations in the region.

In his victory message, President Lincoln praised the Union forces for their bravery and dedication. He also thanked the people of the United States for their support and resilience.

Cortez of Perryville to General Lee.

At this time of year we have had a very dry season, and the crops are about ready for harvest. The people are busy gathering the grain, and the fields are filled with the sound of mowers and reapers. The harvest is expected to be abundant, and the people are looking forward to a prosperous autumn. The weather has been favorable for the crops, and the sun has been hot enough to dry the fields quickly.
