The propeler of the Monitor, a U.S. warship, is seen in the background.

The Monitor was one of the first armored warships, designed to break through the ironclad defenses of the CSS Virginia.

The ship's armor was made of 6 inches of iron plate, making it nearly invulnerable to small arm fire.

The Monitor was named after the American Civil War and was used in the Union's naval fleet.

The ship was built in 1862 and was used in several battles during the war, including the Battle of Hampton Roads.

The Monitor was eventually decommissioned in 1865 and was later sold for scrap.
