A lynching is on account of the creation of a Negro law and the murder of a Negro by a white man. The Negro, John Brown, was hanged from a tree by a mob of white men. The incident occurred in Alabama, USA, on March 26, 1871.

The New York Times, March 26, 1871

In Alabama, a Negro law has been passed by the state legislature. The law makes it illegal to encourage the spread of Negro literacy and education. The law is seen as a direct response to the recent gains made by the Negro population in the state.

The Negro population in Alabama has been increasing rapidly in recent years, and many white residents fear that the gains made by the Negro population will undermine their own economic and social standing. The new law is seen as a way to limit the influence of the Negro population in the state.

The law is opposed by many civil rights activists, who see it as a direct attack on the rights of the Negro population. The law is expected to be challenged in court.

The incident has sparked protests and demonstrations across the state, with many residents calling for the immediate repeal of the law. The state government is under pressure to respond to the protests and to address the concerns of the Negro population.
BONO, the dog who has made his home in the woods near the town, has been missing for several days. Many searches have been made, but the dog has not been found. The owner is offering a reward for any information leading to the recovery of BONO. Anyone with information is asked to contact the local authorities.
