THE CIVILIAN ATTACHMENT
The Stalling of a Revolutionary

New York, Oct. 7.

The President's proclamation declaring the 11th of November a public holiday throughout the country was received in Washington with applause and joy. The citizens of the capital have long been desirous of having a day set apart for the purpose of commemorating the birth of the Union. The celebration of the event was first suggested by President Lincoln, and the idea was taken up by the Legislature of the District of Columbia. The day was chosen as the most appropriate for the occasion, and it was found that the population of the city was in favor of it. The President's proclamation was therefore made public and the citizens were invited to attend the celebration. The day was observed with great rejoicing, and the President was present in person and spoke briefly to the assembled crowd, expressing his satisfaction with the way in which the event had been celebrated.

WASHINGTON, D.C., Oct. 7.

The President, in a message to Congress, has called attention to the importance of commemorating the birthday of the Union. He has said that the day should be observed with great rejoicing, and that the citizens of the country should be reminded of the great blessings which they owe to the Union. The President has also expressed his satisfaction with the way in which the event has been celebrated in the past. He has said that the day should be observed with great rejoicing, and that the citizens of the country should be reminded of the great blessings which they owe to the Union. The President has also expressed his satisfaction with the way in which the event has been celebrated in the past.
