The Price of Liberty is Eternal Vigilance

A recent case may serve to illustrate the point here. The defendant, a man named Brown, was brought into court and charged with assault and battery. He was accused of having assaulted and beaten a man named Smith. The trial lasted for three days, and the jury deliberated for two hours before reaching a verdict. The defendant was found guilty and was sentenced to six months in jail.

The case was an important one, and it was generally believed that the defendant would be acquitted. But the jury, after a careful consideration of the evidence, came to the conclusion that the defendant was guilty.

The defendant was a respectable citizen, and he had many friends who spoke highly of him. But the jury, after a careful consideration of the evidence, came to the conclusion that he was guilty. The defendant was sentenced to six months in jail.
