THE UNDER DOG IN THE FIGHT.

I know that the world, that the great big world, from the peasant up to the king, has a different tale from the tale I tell, and a different song to sing. But for me—and I care not a single fig if they say I am wrong or am right—I shall always go in for the weaker dog. For the under dog in the fight.

I know that the world, that the great big world, will never moment stop to see which dog may be in the fault. But will shout for the dog on top.

But for me, I shall never pause to ask "Which dog may be in the right?" For my heart will beat, while it beats at all, for the under dog in the fight.

The Mystery of Garrick Hall.

"It was just such a night as this, Robert," said Aunt Edith, to my papa, with a little shiver.

"Exactly," papa replied, thoughtfully, "and the same time of year, too."

"Suppose you tell the children all about it," mamma said quietly; "they look as if they wanted to know very much."

"Well, since it is perhaps time they knew, I will tell you how Aunt Edith saved my life," continued papa, turning to Edgar, the eldest of us, "long ago, long before you were born, my boy."

"Aunt Edith and I were only brother and sister; ever so much greater cronies than you and Edgar are, Jessie, not only because we had each other to love, but because we had to make common cause against an enemy, Jeffrey Lawson, our step-mother's son by previous marriage. We lost our own dear mother when we were babies. Jeff was ten years older than I was; and after our father's death which happened when I was eight and Edith six, we would have had a poor time of it but for Dame Turtle, our dear old nurse. She looked after our interests, and fought all our battles valiantly whether we were in the right or wrong. Our step-mother was so wrapped up in Jeff that she bestowed little trouble upon us. I, especially, was no favorite, for she got the silly idea into her head that I stood between Jeff and the property of Garrick. He was a fine, handsome fellow, as I remember when I was 15, and he twenty-five; strong and daring, haughty in disposition and hasty in temper. I could see even then he bitterly resented my being master, and himself as if nobody; for all our servants had grown old with us, and were staunch and loyal to us children of the house."

"Our mother—we called her so, though she was little more than kin, and less than kind—resented it, too, and looked forward with very bitter feelings to the time when I would be 21; for then according to our father's will she was to leave Garrick Hall, the homestead, and reside in a little cottage he owned in Wales."

"It would have been a different position for her, as she had but a small jointure—all her own fortune had been spent on Jeffrey—and by some inexplicable chain of woman's reasoning, she blamed me for what she was pleased to call her unmerited misfortunes. Each year that passed made matters worse between us. As I grew older many things in the management of the property struck me as unjust. The best of the timber was being cut down and the house allowed to fall into a state bordering on ruin, because my mother would not spend money on repairs which I alone was to enjoy the benefit of. Our family lawyer was dead. Jeffrey chose his mother's legal adviser, and neither Edith or I knew where to look for advice or assistance. Things remained very much in this state till I was nearly twenty, when one day Jeff entered my room in a state of wild excitement, and showed me a will that had been discovered in some out-of-the-way corner. It was dated a few days before my father's death; and except that it bequeathed to Jeffrey the sum of £2,000, and the reversion to Garrick if I died without heirs, it was substantially the same as the one already in existence."

"I had my doubts about the validity of the document, but I passed no comment; both the witnesses were dead, and I had not a shadow of proof to advance. Suspicion in such a case goes for nothing, so I held my peace, the more especially as Judson, our old steward, was prepared to swear to my father's signature. So Jeff Lawson had his £2,000."

"On the night of which I am going to tell you, there was a large part of the money in the house. Jeff was going to London the next morning; and he meant to start early; he said good-bye to us over night, and went up to his room first carrying the money with him. Edith and I remained in the dining room a little longer, chatting on different matters, among others Jeff's departure, of a strange restlessness I had observed in his manner of late, of the possible date of his return; and somehow, quite unintentionally, I let fall a hint about my suspicions about the will, and discovered that they corresponded exactly with Edith's. At last, when the fire had burned quite out, and the candles were getting low in their sockets, we went up stairs together. It was a wild November night, and just such angry, impatient gusts of wind and vagrant thunder-claps as this. I occupied the west room; your aunt the one adjoining; and Jeff slept in the west room at the other end of the corridor; while his mother had her apartments in the south wing. As I bade Edith good-night, the clock on the stairs struck 12, and she merrily wished me many happy returns of the day, for I had just entered my 20th birthday. In a few minutes more my light was extinguished, and I was closely wrapped up. In less than half an hour I was sound asleep. Not so Aunt Edith. She was, she told me afterwards, restless and nervous, two most unusual things with her. All efforts to sleep were unavailing, and she gave up the attempt at last, and rising from the bed set down by the fire to read. Twice she fancied she heard footsteps in the corridor, and opened the door to listen. Your aunt was not afraid of the White Lady, our family ghost, or anybody else, girls. Twice she threw herself on a couch with the intention of resting, since slumber was out of the question; but between the storm and the mysterious sounds, through the house, rest was impossible. At length, about 2 o'clock, she fancied she heard some one moving about the room very cautiously; and, nothing doubting but that I was as wakeful and restless as herself, she resolved to come in and speak to me. A sudden gust of wind in the corridor extinguished her candle, and she entered my room in the dark, save for the faint rays of the moonlight which shone through the carelessly drawn curtains."

"As your aunt gently approached my bed, she saw a form advancing on the other side with uplifted hand, in which something white gleamed in the moonlight. Quick as a thought, without a moment's hesitation, her arm was thrown across my neck. The knife of an assassin descended with a terrible force; and glancing off the bone, inflicting a long and jagged gash in her arm. The assassin, who had not seen or heard her approach, instantly fled, leaving his weapon behind; and I was aroused from my slumbers by Edith's shrieks, to find myself bathed in her blood. Binding my silk handkerchief around her arm tightly, to check the bleeding, I sent a servant—for the whole house was aroused by your aunt's shrieks and the violent ringing of my bell—for the nearest surgeon, and then proceeded to search for some traces of the murderous intruder. Mechanically I went first to Jeff's room, probably because I was astonished at not having seen his face among the wondering group gathered round my door. It seemed amazing that he should sleep so soundly through such commotion. The door of the east room (Jeff's) was open, and so was the window, but the room was empty."

Where was Jeff? Why had he gone so suddenly and mysteriously? Why the open window? I was all the more painfully perplexed, as the most careful examination failed to disclose any other means of exit by which the would-be assassin could have escaped. Every door was securely barred, every window except that of the east room was safely fastened. In the flower bed underneath there were tracks of men's feet leading from the window, none whatever leading to it."

"These things made me terribly unhappy, and some suspicion of my thoughts must have crept into my countenance, for Edith, devoted them at once. However, she remained silent about the appearance of the man who attempted my life, and I refrained from questioning her. At best there could be but a conjecture—the room was dark, the man disguised and your aunt high colored. The knife which lay upon my bed appeared with terrible force to us both. It was my pruning knife, and that very afternoon Edith had seen me lend it to Jeff Lawson. Whether the knife had been poisoned, or whether your aunt's wound had been badly dressed in the first instance, I do not know, but inflammation set in and for weeks she was dangerously ill. For days her life was despaired of, and it was only saved at last at the expense of the brave right hand that had saved me so well from a terrible and sudden death."

"The matter made a sensation, which was something more than a nine days' wonder in our village; but as I kept my suspicions to myself, no one else ventured to express any, and Jeffrey's name was never mixed up in the matter. Indeed it got circulated that he left Garrick the evening of the attempted murder and no one connected it with the attack, which was evidently robbery as well as murder, for every drawer and desk in my room was thoroughly ransacked, caused much wonder and discussion. It was pretty generally known that my allowance as a minor was scarcely adequate to my few simple wants."

"What became of Jeff Lawson, father?" Jess asked, with a stolen glance at aunt's face.

"From the night he said good-bye to us in this very room, thirty-one years ago, I have never heard of him nor from him. He disappeared in the most extraordinary manner. Doubtless he is dead; and as far as I am concerned, I have no hope of the mystery of that awful night ever being cleared up."

"And his mother, papa?" Fred questioned.

"Ah, his poor mother, she broke her heart over his disappearance, my boy. Mothers will do such things over the most worthless sons. Well, Upton, what's the matter?"

"If you please, sir, there's a gentleman wants to see you," said our old butler, closing the door behind him, and looking mysteriously around. "He says his business is urgent, but he won't give his name."

"A strange gentleman, at this hour and on such a night," exclaimed papa, rising.

"He must be some belated traveller. Show him in."

We all looked at each other, and glanced toward the door in eager, nervous curiosity, as an elderly gentleman, with very white hair and beard, entered the room, made a courteous bow, which embraced everybody, and proceeded to unbutton an enormous travelling cloak, in which he was enveloped. For a moment or so his eyes wandered round the room, as if in search of something, and then he smiled sadly.

"You don't know me, Mr. Neville," quoth the gentleman, after what seemed an ominous silence, drawing more directly into the light of the fire, which blazed cheerily.

"I have not that pleasure, sir," papa replied, looking at our visitor more attentively.

"Yet my picture hangs there once," pointing to a vacant space among the portraits on the wall. "My name is Jeffrey Lawson."

"Jeff!" we all cried in amazement. Here was the sequel to the story with a vengeance.

"You don't seem overjoyed to see me, Robert," Mr. Lawson said, after another pause. Well, perhaps you are not to blame. But you, Edith, after all these long years—might give me your hand."

At that moment his eyes rested on aunt's helpless right arm, and the most terrible, awful silence I ever witnessed ensued.

Mr. Lawson was the first to recover his self-possession. "Forgive me," he said, and there was a tremor in his voice. "I did not know—I am sorrow." Papa remained stern and silent. I really pitied Mr. Lawson, the odds were so fearfully against him. Not a single kind or encouraging glance met his eye as he looked up a little haughtily, and continued addressing us all. "I did you a great wrong once, Mr. Neville. I have travelled many thousand miles to offer what reparation I can. That will be which I obtained £5,000 was a forgery. But I have come to pay it back with interest."

Papa bowed his head but remained silent.

"Money was absolutely necessary, then, for I had many pressing engagements to meet—my safety, my liberty was at stake—I was desperate; but though my base trick succeeded, it was too late. Absolute ruin and disgrace stared me in the face, and I was compelled to fly, like a thief in the night, to escape the consequences of my folly. That night I secretly left the house, escaping by my bedroom window. Concealing all the money I had, I took passage for Australia, where, by careful speculation and hard work, I soon realized a considerable fortune. I had no desire to return. I formed new friends; new habits, a new life suited me; and so I remained year after year. But I was heartily sorry for, and ashamed of the part I played about the will, and resolved one day to try and make it square with you. The gold fever broke out, and the spirit of adventure being strong in me, I resolved to go the diggings. I was singularly successful; but others were not so fortunate. One poor fellow went by the name of 'Down Tod' I heard frequently spoken of as singularly unlucky. One day I was surprised to receive a message from him as he was very ill, and had a very important confession to make. I went at once, and saw at a glance that the man was dying; but imagine my surprise, when, on a closer survey of his features, I recognized him to be Tom Judson, the son of your old steward—good-for-nothing, graceless, vagrant Ted, who got me into many scrapes as I got him out of. With the utmost difficulty, for he was dying, he told me a singular story. On the very night I left Garrick, he tried to rob and murder me."

"Hearing from his father that I had a large sum of money by me, he resolved to have some of it; and entering the house in the dusk of the evening, he concealed himself behind the corridor window and waited till the house was all quiet; then he entered my room, and after searching in vain for the money, he seized the knife which lay on the table, and in a fit of drunken rage and disappointment, he resolved to cut my throat if I did not give up my purse. Advancing to the bed where I lay sound asleep, he lifted the knife and made a slash at my throat; when to his horror he saw the White Lady, who 'walks', bending over me. Throwing down his knife he fled in terror, and made his escape through a window he found open. In a moment it flashed upon me that your room was mistaken for mine, and my window, which I had left open, proved the means of escape for the villain as it had already proved the means of escape for me. I hope the timely appearance of the White Lady prevented any serious mischief."

"It did me," papa said sadly; "but the slash that missed my throat cost my sister her right hand. She was the lady who saved me, Jeffrey. I am better pleased to have the mystery cleared up than I would be to have the right hand back again, if such a thing were possible," aunt said softly.

"The knife Judson saw on the table must have been your pruning knife, Robert," which I asked one of the servants to return to you," continued Mr. Lawson. "I told the doctor's written and signed confession, witnessed by a magistrate. And now let me once more entreat your forgiveness; and, as my mission is accomplished, I will not intrude any longer. I should have remembered that the Nevilles are not a race to forget and forgive."

"Are the Lawsons, Jeff?" papa cried, advancing without retreating hand. "If so, I claim yours, I have done you an infinitely greater wrong than you did me. I am very sorry."

A bright smile passed over Mr. Lawson's face, altering his whole expression, as he grasped papa's hand; and I am sure there were tears in his eyes as he bent down to kiss Aunt Edith's forehead; and in the smiling silence that followed, as they looked into each other's eyes, all old scores were wiped out, all old scores healed and forgotten.

Hints for the Engaged.

Ought engagements be long or short? It has often been said that nothing helps so much as being engaged to the girl whom he loves, and for whom he works to prepare a suitable home. The solicitude of David Copperfield's friend, Traddles, to buy bits of furniture—flower pots and such like—for the house where he and his betrothed were to dwell, was a pretty thing and much to be commended; but, on the other hand, it is undeniable that long engagements have their drawbacks, especially if the young people see much of each other during the period of probation. In this case much of the rhythm is taken off the poetry of courtship, and no less gliding off the prospects of marriage. There may be a great deal to say against the policy of wedding in haste, but young people who take each other for better or for worse, in all the illusion of mutual trust and admiration, go through a time of ecstasy unknown to those who marry quite rationally. The honeymoon is a such pairs are honeymooners to be remembered all life long, and if after the periods seem dull and loveless by comparison, yet it is something to have lived, for however brief a time, up to the highest ideal of felicity.

Besides, there is no little sweetness in having faced the first hardships of life together. If a young couple have to encounter poverty and if they conquer it side by side, lightening all their labors by sharing them, and diminishing their troubles by mutual consolation and encouragement, they forge closer and closer together. I like to see a snug young man stacking up money in a bank against his wedding day, while his future wife looks on complacently at the operation as if to say: "Thomas must earn a good many more dollars before he can furnish a house good enough for me," but I like still more to see a young husband and wife who have feathered their nest together. It is pleasant to hear a smiling woman remark, "We had nothing when we married, but see now how cosy we have made our house." This means that there has been cheerful hard work on the one side, thrift and self denial on the other—in fact, union. After all, the yoke of marriage is an apparatus that should sit on two pairs of shoulders; and there is nothing very seemly in seeing a girl wait to wear her own part of it until it has been nicely padded with quilted satin.

Sweets.

The most delicious and expensive of the things to be found on the confectioner's counters are the crystallized apricots, figs, ambers and green limes, pears and green grapes, and most of the persons who buy them select them almost piece by piece, making up their boxes to suit themselves. The fashion of doing this has come up within the last few years, and the confectioners who first allowed it made large profits and greatly increased a demand for the better class of candies. A customer fits from far to far and case to case saying, "Give me this, and this, and this," until she can see nothing else that she wants, smiles a little when she is told how much a half of candy instead of the pound she meant to buy. Sherbert candy, made up of three thin, lozenge-shaped layers of sugar, different in colors and flavor, is a favorite with high school girls, and so are the cream walnuts and crystallized walnuts. Dyspeptics pliously avoid the last two things, which are rather less digestible than nutted butter, but they look so nice with their brown skins peeping through their coats of white sugar, that they are so tempting in the long thick bars into which they are sometimes made, that they please every body. Two other kinds of bar candy, the grated and sliced coconut, are much liked and are much sold for children's parties, at which it is desirable to have pretty dishes of confectionery, as well as broken into bits and mixed with other things for boxes. It would be possible to have a varied stock and candies of many prices without going beyond the class of confectioners, which grows larger and larger every year. There are several kinds of plain chocolate lozenges, and next to them in cheapness come the nonpareil chocolates, which are lozenges studded with drops of sugar looking like transparent pills for fairies. Cream chocolates may be filled either with vanilla or orange, as one pleases, and some confectioners use raspberry and other fruit flavors. Vanilla cream chocolates have little cherries inside them, making a delightful mingling of sour, sweet, and bitter, and the almond caramel, which comes in little cubes cased in paper, ranks next in excellence. This paper wrapping, an improvement added the last few years, is able to have a beautiful pink or white candies that lie next to it for a length of time. Almonds are cased both in plain chocolate and in mixture of chocolate and sugar that crystallizes upon them in plain sugar poured upon them in the form of a thin crust and making the almonds to the trade as rough, and in smooth almonds which are polished by constantly moving the pan in which they are dried. In the last variety the nut is not burned; in the others it is. The name of jelly chocolates sounds imposing, but the things themselves are rather disappointing and seem rather like after chocolate creams, but they are liked by the admirers of soft candies.

Curious Flowers.

There are several plants, especially those and during the whole day turn their flowers toward the sun. Such flowers are designated as "heliotropes," and the movement which they thus exhibit is called their "antitropism." This is particularly observable in the common sow thistle, and is a well known fact that a great part of the plants in a serene sky expand their flowers, but before rain they shut them up, as the tulip, for instance. The flowers of chick-wintergreen droop in the night, lest rain or moisture should injure the fertilizing pollen. One species of wood sorrel shuts up or doubles its leaves before storms and tempests, but in a serene sky expands or unfolds them, so that husbandmen can foretell tempests from it. It is also well known that the sensitive plants and other species of Cassia observe the same rule. The flowers of the bindweed, the wood anemone, and the common daisy, even if already open, will shut on the approach of rain. The last named flower appears to have derived its name from its sensitiveness of light. Such phenomena as these are probably determined by the action of light, and the flowers of such plants being shut at ten or eleven o'clock in the morning tell of clouds and gloom, and so predict rain. Besides affording prognostics, many plants also fold themselves up at particular hours, with such regularity as to have acquired particular names from this property. Linnaeus has enumerated forty-six flowers which possess the kind of sensibility. From an arrangement of such flowers it has been ingeniously proposed to form a floral timepiece. The flowers of the heath on the board on the morning at the approach of the sun, and regardless of the weather, shut about noon, and hence its common name of "go-to-bed-at-noon." The Star of Bethlehem expands its flowers about eleven, and closes them at three in the afternoon. The evening primrose is well known from its remarkable periods of regularly shutting with a loud popping noise about sunrise and opening at sunset. After six o'clock, these flowers regularly report the approach of night. The flowers of the garden lettuce open at seven o'clock and shut at ten. That light is the chief agent of these changes seems to be proved by the experiments of De Candolle, made at the Jardin des Plantes, in an underground cellar, illuminated by lamps giving a light equal to fifty-four ordinary gas candles. By lighting these he could cause the flowers of the Star of Bethlehem to open at pleasure, and also those of the camellia, which keeps its flowers closely shut during the night; but he could produce no artificial effect with the strong light, whose flowers and leaves are both folded up at night. With the sensitive plant he succeeded in so completely changing the hour of closure that on the third day from being placed in the lighted cellar it began to fold its leaves in the morning and open them in the evening. One of the most singular cases of the action of light upon plants is that of the Lotus of the Europeans, as described by Theophrastus, and which he represents as rearing and expanding its blossom by day, closing and sinking beneath the surface of the water by night, so as to be beyond the grasp of the hand, and again rising up in the morning to produce its expanded blossom to the sun. The same phenomenon is also related by Pliny.

Too Many Faces.

A few days ago a stranger was moving down Third Street, Louisville. He was in a crooked condition. It was not the length of the street, but the width that bothered him so much.

On reaching the wharf he stepped aboard and proceeded immediately to the cabin. Tumbling into a chair, with his baggage scattered around his feet, he was oblivious to all that was passing, and remained so till he was pushed persistently and yelled the word "shut." Our stranger indicated that he had no ticket.

"Here, then," demanded the Captain. "How much?"

"I was told, and he handed his loose change to the Captain, who took the proper amount. He was soon snoring again. Half an hour passed, and the Captain again made his appearance.

"How much?"

The amount, as stated before, the stranger pouted up and again fell asleep. This time was gone over four times, and when the Captain for the fifth time aroused the sleeper, he had sobered up a little, and was evidently as mad as a hornet. Looking daggers at the indefatigable collector he muttered:

"Look a 'ere, why don't you elect all your fare at once? What you come 'sturb'ing a man in this way for? How much to Cincinnati?"

"Cincinnati!" yelled the Captain. "This here ain't no Cincinnati steamer. This is the ferryboat."

The last seen of our traveling friend he was standing on the wharf with his baggage in his hand and a cartload of levee mud on his boots.

About the Teeth.

Enough has been spoken and written at various times upon the abuses of civilized life, and especially of refined society, to induce us to confess that the constitution of man has deteriorated, and that the teeth have shared in the degeneration of organism. One of the most conclusive authorities is found in the fact that scientific travelers visiting various nations in different parts of the globe have reported that those people who breathe a pure atmosphere, eat food, who take healthful exercise and sufficient rest, who dress in a manner that favors free respiration and free movement of the body, are wonderfully free from those diseases that are so common among those that are so civilized, nations, and people of more or less refinement, during a long life, attacked by any disease. It is a reasonable assertion, then, that if we would endeavor to imitate the healthful manner of living of these nations—which we could do very nearly and still retain all our claims to civilization—we would avoid all the diseases that are so common among those that are so civilized, nations, and people of more or less refinement, during a long life, attacked by any disease. Chancellor Graham is holding court in Jacksonville this week. He will be re-elected without opposition. His name is Neil S. Graham. We notice that at least one of our exchanges has it Nathaniel S. Graham.

Vote with your party this year if you never do it any more. A big Democratic boom in August from Alabama will cheer and thrill the Democracy of the country, from one end of the Union to the other. Stand by your organization and let the gun fire a clear and undisputed report that cannot be mistaken.

If the Independents carry the next Legislature, Bill Lowe will be elected U. S. Senator. Bill Lowe has said that the Democratic party went to the gallows of Mrs. Surratt for their candidate when it took that matchless man, that constitution-loving soldier, Winfield S. Hancock, for its nominee. A few changes will change the complexion of the U. S. Senate. Let the Democracy stand firm and put no one but Democrats on guard.

The report that Gen. Morgan will not address the people of Calhoun at his appointments is not true. He will fill his appointments as advertised.

For our part we say, that while the debate at some points was bitter, personal and loose, we think the necessities of the case demanded it.

There is no old proverb that the Devil must be fought with fire. In the whole debate we are conscious of the fact that we have conducted ourselves as a gentleman should, and that at no point have we dropped an expression calculated to offend any Democrat.

All the rumors that we have said anything about sore head Democrats, or acted wrong at any point are pure-bred, bald-headed campaign lies.

Our friends may expect these things. We trust that nobody will believe any story to our detriment, unless it should be proven to be true by reliable, honorable and responsible men.

Vote for the nominees of your party.

A portion of the Independent ticket has come down in Tallapoosa County, and it is an open secret that Dr. Adams, the Independent candidate for Probate Judge of Cleburne county, will publish a card in the Clarion of that county, declining the race. With Dr. Adams all the Independents of Cleburne will return to the organized Democracy, and a straight party fight will be made in that county. As we have before said, this is a bad year for Independent candidates. The people know the power of organization and this year they intend to avail themselves of it. Let all true lovers of their country fall into line. Organized effort means a grand victory for the Democracy and constitutional rights for all.

Spotless as a star—Gen. Winfield S. Hancock

Hon. Jas. B. Weaver, the Greenback candidate for President of the United States, will speak in Jacksonville Saturday the 17th inst.

We cannot be in town to hear him, but would be glad if some one would ask the General if he is in favor of extending the benefits of his soldiers gold bill to the soldiers of the Confederacy.

We venture he will answer "No." The General introduced a bill in Congress, if we mistake not, which proposed to pay Union Soldiers the difference between gold and greenbacks at the time they received their pay; or rather to pay them about twice over again for invading the South.

Inasmuch as the South pays the bulk of the revenue, we wait to say that for one we are tired of working to pay yankee soldiers for invading our country and laying waste to our fields. We are already taxed to death to pension a world of them, and we are opposed to Mr. Weaver's bill, unless he extends the benefits of it to the Confederate soldiers.

But General Weaver will never say he is in favor of extending the benefits of the bill to Confederate soldiers. We wish some one would put the question to him when he speaks here.

The Candidates for this Senatorial District will move into Cleburne County next Monday and speak there for the next two weeks. The County Candidates will be met at their appointments by other speakers, in the interest of the State ticket, other than the Senatorial Candidates. So the canvass promises to be lively and interesting in Cleburne.

Messrs. Camp will have a saw mill in operation at the foot of the mountain one mile from town by Monday, at which time parties may have their orders. Mr. Camp will be at Messrs. Rowan, Dean & Co's most of the time, or at his residence on Depot Street.

Gen. Morgan and Private Carmichael, the one armed Confederate soldier who is the nominee of the Democratic party for Auditor, had good crowds at White Plains and Jacksonville, and made a fine impression.

If the laboring men of Calhoun and Cleburne counties will take the trouble to turn to page 686 of the House Journals of 1878-9 and look at H. B. 361 and the amendments thereto, to "define the responsibilities of parties purchasing farm produce," they will find that Col. Sheild voted for a bill to put them into virtual slavery. The bill provided that when a man got an advance from his landlord and left the farm without paying the same (no matter what the treatment he received) he was guilty of a felony, and liable to imprisonment in the Penitentiary. The bill went further and reversed all rules of law and put the burden of proof on the defendant (tenant) to prove his innocence. At no time in any country has so monstrous a measure been proposed. It was defeated in the Senate, but so far as Col. Sheild's influence was concerned he tried to fasten on the laborers of this county, white and black, this new system of slavery per eonage.

Don't take our word for it. Look to the Journals. The Probate and other public offices of the county contain them.

The Grant Boom.

It seems perfectly easy to some for Grant to be elected to the third term but one thing we do know that Kendall's Spavin Cure is the very best liniment ever discovered for any ailment on horses or for rheumatism or any other seated pain in man. It is used at all seasons of the year with wonderful success. Read the advertisement for Kendall's Spavin Cure.

A STANDING OFFER.

The Republican has always supported the nominees of the Democratic party since the war. The fact that its editor stands in that relation to the party in the present canvass makes no difference. The paper cannot be silent in the canvass for this cause; but we do not want to give the slightest ground for being charged with taking any unfair advantage in this canvass, and we hereunto now make a standing offer of the columns of the paper, free of charge, to our opponent, whenever he feels aggrieved by anything the paper may say, and desires to

KENDALL'S SPAVIN CURE.

The most successful remedy ever discovered, as it is certain in its effects, and does not blister. Read proof below.

From Rev. P. N. GRANGER.

Presiding Elder of the St. Albans District.

St. Albans, Vt., Jan. 20, 1880.

Dr. J. J. Kendall & Co., Gents: In reply to your letter, I will say that my experience with "Kendall's Spavin Cure" has been very satisfactory indeed. Three or four years ago, I procured a bottle of your agent, and with it cured a horse of lameness caused by a spavin. Last season my horse became very lame, and I turned him out for a few weeks, when he became better, but when I put him on the road he grew worse; when I discovered that a ring bone was forming, I procured a bottle of "Kendall's Spavin Cure," and with it cured him so that he is not lame, neither can the hunch be found.

Respectfully yours,

CHAS. E. PARKER.

Perseverance Will Tell.

Stoughton, Mass., March 16th, 1880.

R. J. KENDALL & Co., GENTS:—In justice to you and myself, I think that I ought to let you know that I have recovered two bone spavins with "Kendall's Spavin Cure," one very large one, don't know how long the spavin had been there. I have owned the horse eight months. It took me four months to take the large one off, and two for the small one. I have used ten bottles. The horse is entirely well, not at all stiff, and no hunch to be seen or felt. This is a wonderful cure. It is a new thing here, but it does for all who it is done for me, its sale will be very great.

Respectfully yours,

CHAS. E. PARKER.

Kendall's Spavin Cure.

Kelley's Island Erie co. O. Feb. 28 1880.
Dr. J. J. KENDALL & Co., GENTS:—I have used your Kendall's Spavin Cure on a bone spavin, and am pleased to report that it has taken the enlargement completely off. It took only one bottle to perform the cure. I am confident if it is properly used, it will do all you claim for it.

Yours truly,

C. M. LINCOLN.

STATEMENT MADE UNDER OATH.

TO WHOM IT MAY CONCERN:—In the year 1875, I treated with Kendall's Spavin Cure, a bone spavin of several months' growth, nearly half as large as a hen's egg, and completely stopped the lameness and removed the enlargement. I have worked the horse ever since very hard, and he never has been lame, nor could I ever see any difference in the size of the hock joints, since I treated him with Kendall's Spavin Cure.

H. A. GAINS,
Enosburgh Falls Vt., Feb. 25th, 1879.

KENDALL'S SPAVIN CURE

On Human Flesh.

PATTON'S MILLS, WASHINGTON CO. N. Y., Feb. 21, 1878.

R. J. KENDALL, M. D., DEAR SIR:—The particular case on which I used your Spavin Cure was a malignant ankle spavin of sixteen months' standing. I had tried many things, but in vain. Your Spavin Cure put the foot to the ground again, and for the first time since hurt, in a natural position. For a family liniment it exceeds anything we ever used.

Yours truly,

REV. M. P. BELL,

Pastor M. E. Church, Patton's Mills, N. Y.

Kendall's Spavin Cure is sure in its effects, mild in its action as it does not blister, yet it is penetrating and powerful to reach every deep seated pain, or to remove any bony growth or other enlargement such as spavins, splints, curbs, callous, sprains, swellings, any lameness and all enlargements of the joints or limbs, or rheumatism in man and for any purpose for which a liniment is used for man or beast. It is now known to be the best liniment for man ever used, acting mild, and yet certain in its effects.

Send address for Illustrated Circular which we think gives positive proof of its virtues. No remedy has ever met with such unequalled success to our knowledge, for best as well as man.

Price, $1 per bottle or six bottles for $5. All druggists have it or can get it for you. It will be sent to any address on payment of price by the proprietors.

Go to the polls and vote.

Fine rains this week. Hence crops are looking better.

Capt. Leary F. Box and Judge Whitlock spoke in the Court House Thursday.

MARRIED on the 22nd inst. at the residence of the bride's father by the Hon. L. W. Cannon, Mr. J. A. Calahan to Miss Ella McGinnis.

GIN FILE.—I have just received one of the "Georgia Gin Files," which does its work with files. Parties wishing gins filed can correspond with me. L. A. WEAVER.

Rains have been general and the crop prospects brightens.

The Liberty Pole erected in Oxford is 108 feet high above the ground, the beautiful banner of our country can be seen for miles.

Much credit is due the undertakers of such a patriotic enterprise.

A Hancock club is now in order here. Proceed your patriots to enlist. Let the good work go on and victory will be ours.

The Hop at the Female Academy, Wednesday night was the most delightful affair of the season.

From the looks of some of the boys—something was lost and something gained. A strange place for trading, but the object was a "laudable" one, as the deacon said, when he killed his neighbors hog, in order to keep it from spreading fleas under the church house.

Personal.
Miss Lena Parr of Gadsden, near Jacksonville, is again in her mountain home. She is stopping with the family of Mrs. M. E. Francis.

Miss Mary Pierson, of Cave Spring, Ga., and Misses Mable Baker and Emma Forney of Selma, are visiting the family of Capt. Jno. M. Wylly.

Miss Carrie Wilson of Atlanta, is visiting the family of Maj. Peyton Rowan.

Miss Agnes Winburn of Talladega, is visiting the family of Dr. J. Y. Nisbet. She will leave for home next week.

Candidates can now sit themselves down upon the grassy sward and count the cost of priceless reputation.

REWARD.
The thief is a man about 5 feet 10 or 11 inches high, sandy hair, heavy mustache, red complexion, goes by the name of Jerry Smith, very large pimples on his face, wound on neck; he is about 40 years old, a few gray hairs on his head, weighs about 160 or 170 pounds.

Also a woman about 18 years old, slim spare-built woman, black hair and eyes. To any one giving any information concerning these people, will be handsomely rewarded.

JOHN PATTERSON.
Jacksonville, Ala.

With pain we notice the death of Mr. Jas. B. Hudson in Birmingham on the 25th inst. He was raised here, and many who read this will drop a silent tear as they think of boy-hood days. To his bereaved relatives we extend our heartfelt sympathy.

A STANDING OFFER.
The Republican has always supported the nominees of the Democratic party since the war. The fact that its editor stands in that relation to the party in the present canvass makes no difference. The paper cannot be silent in the canvass for this cause; but we do not want to give the slightest ground for being charged with taking any unfair advantage in this canvass, and we hereand now make a standing offer of the columns of the paper, free of charge, to our opponent, whenever he feels aggrieved by anything the paper may say, and desires to reply to it.
