WHAT IS HOME.

Home's not merely four square walls,
Though hung with pictures nicely gilded;
Home is where affection calls,
Filled with shrines the heart has builded.

Home, go watch the faithful dove,
Sailing 'neath the heaven above us;
Home is where we've one to love,
Home is where there's one to love us.

Home's not merely roof and room;
Home needs something to endear it;
Home is where the heart can bloom—
Where there's some kind heart to cheer it!

What is home with none to meet,
None to welcome, none to greet us?
Home is sweet, and only sweet,
When there's one we love to meet us.

THE LOST RING.

The summer was in its glow an prime. The hilltops were wreathed in amber mist; the river murmured softly through its willow-fringed shores; the woods, all rifled of their leafy honors, were like cathedral aisles, carpeted with gold, and russet and crimson layers, and the nuts had never been so plentiful up in Wrex's Woods.

Squirrels, school-boys, picnic parties and tramps all had their pick and choice of the nuts, and yet, with every mid-night frost and sunrise gale, the ground was strewn afresh with them, and any adventurous stick, thrown up into the branches, would bring down a shower of new treasures.

"But why don't they bring these nuts to market?" cried Laura Heritage. "Why don't we have them in London?"

"Ain't enough of 'em, miss," said Job, a sturdy, young farm laborer. "Besides, they aint what you'd call a fancy nut."

Just then Mr. Austin, the handsome young curate of Comberdale, came up, and held out his hand to Miss Heritage with a smile.

"I am glad to see you here," said he.

"And I am so glad to be here!" said Laura, enthusiastically.

"How do you like a country life?" he asked.

"Oh, so much!" cried Laura: "Maple Farm is delightful, and Mr. and Mrs. Jennings are like two antiquities out of a curiosity-shop. And mamma would give untold gold for the china that they use—extravagant creatures—on the table every day! I could have cried outright last night, when Phœbe dropped a cup and broke it. And we have open wood fires on huge hearths, and the logs are so deliciously fragrant as they burn, and——"

"And little Phœbe?" said Mr. Austin, smilling—"doesn't she strike you as a curiosity, also?"

Laura laughed.

"The niece?" said she. "Do you know I have scarcely looked at her? I like pretty people and pretty things, and that child is such a figure!"

She spoke carelessly, quite unaware—and very possibly she would not have cared had she known it—that Phœbe Jennings was in the sunken glade just below, where the yellow sunshine quivered, and a noisy little rivulet leaped over noisy stones on its way to the river.

Phœbe was big eyed and solemn, with face and hands almost as brown as the nuts, and hair that waved and crinkled all over her head.

Mr. Austin had always had a pleasant word and a smile for her; Miss Heritage was the realistic of her ideas of an angel—and now they are laughing about her.

Phœbe stood a minute with her great eyes brimming over, her lower lip tightly clasped by pearl-white teeth.

"Job," said she, at last, "my bucket is full. I think I'll go home."

"What, a'ready?' cried Job.

"Yes," said Phœbe. "May'be, Aunt Jennings wants me. I'd better go.

Mrs. Jennings cutting a piece of gold clear noney in the comt, out of a glass box, was astonished at the breathless apparition of her little niece, flying headlong down the steep grade of the apple orchard.

"Bless me, child!" said Mrs. Jennings. "Didn't I tell you you could stay till sundown.

"I—I didn't want to," said Phœbe.

And she rushed up stairs to her room, and cried until she could cry no longer.

Miss Heritage "liked pretty people and pretty things," and she (Phœbe) was "such a figure!"

She had not known it before. She had thought her calico dress, with the black stars upon it, was beautiful; and she had innocently rejoiced in the brown ribbon bow for her neck, that had been her uncle's own present

And then Phœbe looked in the little six-inch glass and realized how brown, how unkempt, and gipsy-like she was—how dissimilar was her dress from Miss Heritage's soft laces and floating ribbonloops. And Mr. Austin, in whose bible-class she was—

"I wish I was dead!" sobbed poor Phœbe. "No, aunt, please!" to Mrs. Jennings' kindly call. "I don't want any tea."

"No tea!" said Mrs. Jennings, in amazement. "Child, does your head ache?"

"Yes," said Phœbe, who had never known what it was to suffer an ache or pain in her life.—"Yes! Please—please let me be alone!"

Two days later Miss Heritage came down to breakfast with a perturbed air.

"My pearl ring," said she: "it's gone.

Now Miss Heritage's pearl ring was not an ordinary trinket, but a costly pearl-shaped pearl, set in a slender hoop of braided gold.

Farmer Jennings set down his coffee-cup and stared; Mrs. Jennings uttered a little cry; Phœbe who was bringing in a plate of hot toast from the kitchen, stood still.

"Deary me!" said Mrs. Jennings "where can you have dropped it?"

"I never dropped it at all," said Laura; positively. "It has been taken—stolen from my room!"

"But, Miss Heritage," said the farmer's wife, mildly, "who is there that would steal it?"

"I don't know," said Laura, excitedly. "I know that it has been stolen, and I wish you would send for the police at once."

Of course there was no one upon whom suspicion would fall but Phœbe—poor, friendless, orphaned Phœbe! Not exactly friendless, either, for Mr. Austin quietly declared that it was quite impossible that she could have committed a crime like this.

"I have known her ever since she came to Maple Farm," said he. "She is a member of my Bible-class. She never did it!"

And Mrs. Jennings valiantly asserted that "she wouldn't never believe no such thing of Phœbe, as never yet so much as took a pin as wasn't hers!"

"You are all infatuated about that girl," said Laura, petulantly. "Who else could have taken it?"

"But surely, Miss Heritage," pleaded Mr. Austin, "you will not prosecute the poor thing? You will give poor Phœbe the benefit of the doubt?"

"I do not see that there is any doubt," said Laura, stiffly; "and my pearl ring must be returned."

"I will pay you the value of it myself," said Mr. Austin, eagerly, "if——"

"You are very much interested in the culprit," said Laura, with a curl of her full, red lips; 'but that will not answer the ends of justice at all. No. She stole the ring—let her confess, or suffer!"

The curate looked at Laura with mute surprise—almost with disgust.

At that moment, when Miss Heritage sat, like a female Fate, on the sofa, and Mrs. Jennings was comforting poor little Phœbe up stars, Job came shuffling in.

"Found your ring?" said he.

"No," cried Laura.

"Here it is," said Job.

And sure enough, the great pear-shaped pearl lay glimmering, like a drop of moonlight, in the horny palm of his hand.

"Where did you get it?" breathlessly demanded Miss Heritage.

Job chuckled, and looked rather sheepish.

"Sent a booshel o'nuts to my cousin Jenny," said he. "Jenny was always partial to nuts; and she writ back to me—what did I mean by sendin' her a pearl ring in 'em?" Didn't I know she was keeping company with Peter Crane? And I writ I didn't send no pearl ring; and this mornin' this came back by post," nodding his head at the jewel. "And the very minute I set eyes on it I knowed it was the one Miss Heritage wore that afternoon at the nuttin'."

Laura turned scarlet.

"I must have dropped it in the nuts," said she.

"Of course you did," said Job. "Wonder you never thought of it afore?"

So the awful shadow of suspicion was lifted off Phœbe; and Miss Heritage even condescended to murmer some sort of apology before she went away.

"But it's too ridiculous the fuss they make about that girl," said Miss Heritage, viciously. "Richard Austin will never forgive me for daring to doubt her."

No; it was quite true, Mr. Austin was completely disenchanted with the dimpled and rock-hearted Laura. And when he did marry, three years afterwards, the bride's name was simple "Phœbe."

For the dark-eyed child had grown into radiant womanhood, and Richard Austin knew that she was a diamond fit to wear on any man's breast.

The Earth and Moon.

According to the recent calculations of Mr. Darwin, the earth and the moon must have formed only one body some 54,000,000 years or more ago, and at a time when this body was rotating at the rate of about one revolution in five hours the mass now forming the moon became separated from it. Thus was the moon born; and Professor Ball, in his exposition of Darwin's views, concludes that in time the wound on the earth became entirely healed, leaving no scar to testify to the mighty catastrophe. To this final conclusion Mr. O. Fisher now offers an amendment. He believes that the scars are the ocean basins. When the moon's mass was thrown from the the earth, the liquid interior must have risen to fill the hole, and portions of the granite crust must have been borne toward the cavity. The holes only partially filled up, and the crust became broken into the fragments which now form the continents.

Cavendish in America.

A Cincinnatti correspondent says I recently met Gen. Averill who told me a singular story about Lord Cavendish, who was lately assassinated in Dublin, Ireland. "You are not aware" said he that Cavendish was in the Army of the Potomac in 1862 and I entertained him for a while. He came te this country with his brother. Lord Hartington, now the Marquis of Hartington, and with Sir John Rose. I was on my way from Washington, where I had been ill to join McClellan, just before Antietam. On the way certain Englishmen, seeing me with a general's insignia, introduced themselves as Lords Cavendish and Hartington and with them was Rose, I was pretty ill, being barely convalescent, lying down as I was most of the time I heard them talk and divided lunch with them. Cavendish was a young fellow, pretty well made, of a frank, bluff style. His elder brother, Hartington, was something over thirty years old. When we got out at Berlin, in Maryland, to find the army these young fellows still went along with us, and we came to a small house at the roadside, standing rather on a hill, which had but one bed in it and was inhabited by a poor woman. We concluded to stop there for the night and these young lords lay down on the floor with my staff, making no complaint, and insisted on my taking the bed.

"The staff officers got to like them pretty well, and used to say to this Cavendish who was killed Saturday: 'Cavendish, give me some of your tobacco.' They stayed around camp some time, and suddenly Hartington disappeared and turned up in Lee's army. The others did not go. I never inquired as to whether General McClellan permitted Hartington to pass the lines, but have the idea that he just walked out of the picket line and went over. Sir John Rose, when I saw him afterward in Canada, rather apologized for Hartington's disappearance, which was the first time I knew that he had gone to Lee,"

Windows In Warm Weather.

Tamboured embroidery on muslin or on net is the novelty for summer curtains. For simple sash curtains the sprigged or dotted patterns or those with large rings or daisies wrought in them are used without borders, while for the flowing curtains there is a vine or striped border and scalloped edges down the inner sides and across the bottom. The square meshed canvas or grenadine curtains are seen in many of the handsomest residences for both curtains—those fixed in shape next the sash and for the flowing curtains behind it. The trimming to these is insertion and lace; either Cluny or the antique lace is preferred, and sometimes the showy Russian lace is used. The scrim curtains have very much the same effect as grenadine curtains and are much less expensive. Colored embroidery in artistic designs has been added to these white curtains, forming sometimes a dado or else a border on two sides, and occasionally there are small figures wrought all over the curtain. For those who like more color the Madras muslins are commended, with their gold, olive or robin's egg blue grounds, strewn with flowers of gay colors. These come in beatifully blended colors that give almost the effect of stained glass. Momie cloth, made of cotton has taken the place of cretonne for cottage parlors and chambers, because it is found to be more durable.

Cornices and lambrequins are abandoned. Poles of wood or of gilt, with rings to which the curtains are attached, are used for curtains of all kinds, whether thin or thick, muslin or lace, cotton or damask. The rings are sewed directly to the hem at the top of the curtain, or else they are attached by little clamps that have been made for this purpose. In the place of lambrequins, there are sometimes valances, or the Queen Anne cap, made of a straight width of plush, felt or other stuff, simply edged with gimp or fringe, placed smoothly across the top of the window, and from beneath this fall the muslin or lace curtains.

The First American Flag.

In 1870, W. J. Canby, of Washinton D. C. read before the Historical Society of Pennsylvania a paper on the history of the American flag, in which it was stated that Mrs. John Ross was the first maker and partial designer of the stars and stripes. A committee of Congress, of whom Colonel George Ross was one, accompanied by General Washington, in June, 1776, called upon Mrs. Ross, who was then a widow, doing business as an upholsterer in a house still standing, formerly No. 89, now No. 239 Arch street, below Third, in Philadelphia, and engaged her to make the flag from a rough drawing, which, according to her suggestions, was redrawn by General Washington in pencil then and there in her back parlor. The flag thus designed was made by her and was adopted by Congress and was the first "Star spangled Banner" which ever floated on the breeze.

Now, who was this Mrs. Ross? She was a daughter of Samuel Griscom, who was a Friend and prominent in his day, the head of a large family of children, who were all educated in habits of industry. Her maiden name was Elizabeth Griscom. After the death of John Ross she married, second, Joseph Ashburn, who died a prisoner of war in Mill Prison, England, and third, John Claypoole, a lineal descendant of Oliver Cromwell. Mrs. Ross' first husband was the nephew of Col. Geo. Ross, the member of the committee of Congress and one of the signers of the Declaration of Independence, A summary of the facts narrated in the paper referred to will be found in Admiral Preble's "History of the Origin and Progress of the Flag of the United States," second edition, page 192, et seq., and in the daily papers following the date of the reading of the paper, March 14, 1870.

The first marriage of this lady was a chidless one. This fact was attested to the writer by four of her daughters, the children of her last husband; first by Mrs. Clarissa S. Wilson, who was the eldest of that family (when in the year 1857, at her own instance and request, the writer took down her statement from her lips, the substance of which was embodied in the paper referred to), and afterwards by three of the sisters of Mrs. Wilson (of whom the writer's mother was one), and others who were familiar with the family history, to whom the paper was submitted for inspection and correction before its reading. The words of Mrs. Wilson were: "John and Betsy formed a partnership for life, and on his arriving at age were married and established in business by his father. Betsy being then eighteen; but the partnership was dissolved in two years by John's death, leaving Mrs. Ross a young widow without any children."

A Five Mile Snake.

A writer from Cummins, Georgia, says in our childhood we often heard of a hoopsnake, one that, bringing its head and tail together, rolled over and over like a wagon wheel. It was said that this snake did its execution with its tail, that being pointed like a needle. We never had the terror of seeing one of them, but did, when about eight years old, see a jointed snake. The joints are about six inches long. When alarmed the snake fell to pieces, the head joint darting off like an arrow to a place of concealment. That was the last snake of the kind we ever saw until quite recently we saw a hoop-jointed snake. We were walking leisurely one day through our field close to an old fence, which was near a small branch and marshy swamp. Thinking of no evil, but rather imagining on that piece of ground we could make a bale of cotton to the acre, which would buy twice as much corn as the land would make, all of a sudden we were startled out of ourself by something rolling by us which looked like the rim of a buggy wheel without the spokes. When it passed about ten steps beyond us, in making an effort to turn, it accidently struck the end of a projecting rail. This must have alarmed it, for all at once it fell to pieces, and the head joint darted through a crack of the fence and into the swamp as quickly as possible. Remembering the jointed snake of our boyhood, and that our grandfather had told us if we would watch we would see the head return for the joints left, as badly as we were scared we determined to watch and wait the head's return. Not unmindful that we had been told by them of old time that the only protector from a hoop snake was to get behind a tree or stump on the opposite side from the one it was coming, we took a position behind an old stump and waited developments. It was not long before the head came slowly and cautiously through the crack of the fence, raised itself to an angle of forty-five degrees, looked in every direction, and then commenced the work of rejoining its body and tail to its head. This was soon done. Its next movement was to rear itself up perpendiculary or, in other words, to stand on its tail. As the head went up we distinctly saw that each joint possessed India rubber qualities, for as it went up each joint became extended until, when the perpendicular position was attained, the head was entirely out of sight. By a mathematical calculation we ascertained its head to be a little less than five miles high, when it passed out of sight. Having taken its bearings, it gradually contracted to nine feet. It then made a circular dart for its tail, and without more ado rolled off rapidly in the direction of the Atlantic.

Measuring Trees.

In order to ascertain the height of an object, a peculiar method of measurement is in use among the Isthmus Indians. In measuring the height of a tree, for instance, a man proceeds from its base to a point where, on turning the back towards it, and putting the head between the legs, he can just see the top; at the spot where he is able to do this he makes a mark on the ground, and then paces the distance to the base of the tree; the distance isequal to the height.

House Property in Paris.

Paris is rapidly gaining in size. She adds some 50,000 or 60,000 souls annually to her population, four-fifths of whom are work people and small employes, and yet wherever you go what most strikes your eye is that nowhere are modest dwellings in course of construction. The tendency is to construct excessively, at rents varying from 5,000f. to 30,000f., expensive abodes, and M. Leroy Beaulieu thinks a house property crisis must soon break out, which will considerably reduce rents for a few years. Just as the very dear apartments must diminish in rent as they increase in number, he argues, the more modest dwellings will increase in rent, owing to the proportion of construction not keeping pace with the influx of population. Not only, in fact, is the proportion of increase of dwellings of a modest character small, but great numbers of such dwellings have been and are being pulled down to make way for grand boulevards and avenues stocked with expensive apartments, thus producing an ever increasing disproportion between the two classes of abodes. M. Leroy Beaulieu does not think the present tendency of speculators in house property is due so much to the increase of the price of ground, which in the least populous quarters, has doubled and trebled in the last two years, reaching in the Twentieth Arrondissement often 40f. a square metre—nay, rising as high as 80f. and 100f.—as to capitalists preferring the comfort of long leases and a few wealthy tenants to a multitude of small apartments with all the annoyances and disagreeable necessities entailed in collecting rents from poor tenants. A table he supplies from the property register shows the proportion of the different classes of abodes in 1878. Apartments of a rent not exceeding 300f. are numbered 468,641; of 301f. to 500f. 74,360; of 500f. to 750f., 61,083; of 750f. to 1,000f., 21,147; of 1,000f. to 1,250f., 17,202; of 1,250f. to 1,500f., 6,198; of 1,500f. to 3,000f., 21,453; of 3,000f. to 6,000f., 9,985; of 6,000f. to 10,000f., 3,049; of 10,000f. to 20,000f., 1,453; of upward of 20,000f., 421; total, 684,902.

Cattle Lifting.

In the wild days of raiding, cattle-lifting, and fire-raising, when the forays left famine and pestilence behind them, the middle and western Border marches of England, were far more populous than at present. As the birds of prey of the East came flocking to the feast on a dying animal, from what seemed a speckless sky over a lifeless solitude, so the glens that have long siuce been cleared for sheep-walks sent forth their swarms of hardy moss-troopers, when the bale-fires were kindled on the heights, and messengers went round with the gathering word. And these men made love in their own rough fashion, marrying and multiplying, and rearing their ragged families. It is a mystery how they manage to maintain themselves, when the arable land around each keep or hamlet was measured by the field works that could be thrown up to protect it. For although cattle were "lifted" at least as often as bred at home, there must have been limits to the herds on either side of the Border; and when the jackmen found short commons at the tables of their chief, the unlucky non-combatants must often have gone fasting. But the fittest survived, struggled up somehow; and the men were lean, long-winded generation, who, with hard exercise and spare diet, trained down to sinew and bone; who carried no superfluous weight in the saddle; who were always in condition to give the blood hounds a breather, if it were their mishap to be hunted like William of Deloraine; and who frequently lived to extreme old age, but more often came to their end by spear or halter.

Engineer Melville.

Chief Engineer George W. Melville, who is making the hazardous and almost hopeless search for the missing boat and party of the Jeannette under command of Lieutenant Chipp, is a man of very striking appearance. He was born in New York, and in his young days his family was well known among the old Knickerbockers. He is a heavy-built man, weighing about 190 pounds, and is about five feet eleven inches in height. Of large and powerful frame, he is of light complexion, and has bright, piercing blue eyes. He is supple, and a skilled athlete. When he returned from the Arctic in the Tigress, in November, 1872, he visited the engineer's office in the Navy Yard, and when met by his brother officers the natural question was asked: "Well, George, how do you feel?" He answered, "As bright as a new uniform, and I never felt better;" and to prove his assertion turned a hand-spring without the least difficulty. When serving his time in the machine shop, he could do more work in the same time than any other man and when passing through the shop, if he met an obstruction no higher than his shoulders, he would spend no time in going around it, but would jump over it with the greatest ease.

Good and Bad Table Manners

We do not as a nation, comport ourselves well at the table. In the first place we eat too fast, and are apt to make a noise over our soup. Well-bred people put their soup into their mouths without a sound, lifting up their spoon slowly, thinking about it, and managing to swallow it noiselessly.

In the second place, we are accused of chewing our food with the mouth open, and of putting too much in the mouth at once. Again, we are accused, particularly at railway stations and hotels, of putting our heads in our plates, and of eating with the knife instead of with the fork.

Some people eat instinctively with great elegance in them; some never achieve elegance in these minor matters, but all should strive for it. There is no more repulsive object than a person who eats noisily, grossly, inelegantly. Dr. Johnson is remembered for his brutal way of eating almost as much as for his great learning and genius. With him it was selfish preoccupation.

Fish and fruits are eaten with silver knives and forks, or, if silver fish-knives are not provided, a piece of bread can be held in the left hand. Fish corrodes a steel knife.

Never tilt a soup-plate for the last drop, or scrape your plate clean. Leave something for "manners"—a good old rule.

A part of table manners should be the conversation. By mutual consent, every one should bring only the best that is in him to the table. There should be the greatest care taken in the family circle to talk of only agreeable topics at meals.

The mutual forbearance which prompts the neat dress, the respectful bearing, the delicate habit of eating, the attention to table etiquet, should also make the mind put on its best dress, and the effort of any one at a meal should be to make himself or herself as agreeable as possible.

No one should show any haste in being helped, any displeasure at being left until the last. It is always proper at an informal meal to ask for a second cut, to say that rare or undone beef is more to your taste than the more cooked portions.

But one never asks twice for soup or fish; one is rarely helped twice at dessert. These dishes, also salad, are supposed to admit of but one helping.

The Colorado Desert.

There is an old adage which says that Arizona was the last spot on earth to be created; that Yuma is the outpost of the nether regions and the hottest place in the world, Everyone knows the old story of the two soldiers, who, while stationed at Fort Yuma, died, and going straight to Hades, returned in a short time for blankets! Be that as it may, there can be no doubt that parts of Southern California and Arizona are among the hottest regions of the world. Neither the Desert Gobi in Asia nor the Great Sahara in Africa can be worse in this respect than their small relative, the Colorado Desert in California. A protracted journey of some four weeks over this desert gives an excellent chance to see it in its worst aspect. The desert occupies almost the whole of the large county of San Diego. It is some one hundred and fifty miles long and fifty miles wide, and the Southern Pacific railroad runs through the centre of it. About sixty miles from Los Angelos the railroad encounters a very heavy grade, one hundred to one hundred and ten feet to the mile, and it continues for twenty-two miles. At the summit, known as San Gorgonio Pass, begins the descent into the desert, and every mile brings you to a more desolate country. At Whitewater station, twenty miles from the summit, the desert commences in earnest. First a few flowers enliven the scene. Large œnotheras, three or four inches in diameter, grow on small talks five or six inches high. Large plants of abronic maritima, with clusters of brilliant purple flowers, spread over the ground. A little gilia with white corolla, yellow centre, adds its beauty to the scene; and the only shrub, larrea Mexican, or creosote-plant, with yellow flowers and sticky leaves and branches, reminds you of the forests you have left behind.

Princess Victoria.

Princess Victoria, the sixteen-year-old daughter of the Crown Princess fo Germany, was confirmed a few weeks ago with her cousin Leopold, the son of Prince Frederick Charles. The service was celebrated in a magnificent State apartment arranged as a chapel, and the Crown Princess herself brought in her young daughter, dressed in a plain gown of white silk, with her fair hair drawn back from her round boyis face. One curious part of the ceremony was the reading aloud by the Prince and Princess of their confession of faith, a document which, according to an old tradition of the House of Hohenzollern, had been drawn up by the candidates for confirmation themselves.

The sweetest life is to be ever making sacrifices for Christ; the hardest life a man can lead on earth, the most full of misery, is to be always doing his own will and seeking to please himself.

We are authorized to announce J. D. HAMMOND as a candidate for re election to represent Calhoun county in the next Legislature.

Hon. W. A. Handley in a recent letter to the papers "goes for" the old fogies, according to his own paper, in a style that is peculiar.

It appears to us that there is entirely too much abuse of old fogyism by the Young America of the present day. They are a valuable conservative force. Their main fault lies in the fact that they won't give all the money they have accumulated by years of patient and careful toil to public improvements suggested by Young America. If Young America is really as progressive as he would have people believe, let him put his hand in his own pocket and proceed to develope things. Hasn't got any? Of course not. Young America rarely accumulates, and when he does he is no more public spirited than Old Fogy. It is those fellows who have nothing and to whom talking is cheap that make all the fuss. Hon. W. S. Handly may be a very different kind of man. We hope he is; but if he is, he is an exception to the rule. Most of the so called progressionists are arrant humbugs.

From the Montgomery Advertiser.

Address of the Democratic and Conservative State Executive Committee.

To the people of Alabama:

In behalf of the Democratic and Conservative party of Alabama we congratulate you on the continued ascendency of that party in our State. But still more do we congratulate you on the grand achievements of our party. With exultation we point to these and say to all the people, "By our fruits let us be judged." You have seen that how that our State, since that great conflict with and conquest over the malevolent spirit and power of Radicalism. in 1874, with our government reclaimed from th estrangers and money changers, our alters of home rule and self government rebuilt, our State credit regained, our State pride restored, our dept reduced to manageable proportions, and with all departments of the government economically, wisely and faithfully administered, has taken rapid and giant strides forward to meet its high destiny, and that to-day her people are in the enjoyment of nearly all the substantial benefits of good government rightly administered. Starting with that great era in our history our State has bounded forward in a career of prosperity and development which has astonnied the most sanguine of the people at home, and has attracted the attention and respect of those abroad.

To insure a continuance of these favorable conditions, and to promote this progress and development, and to perpetuate this good government, the Representatives of our party have recently taken council together.

The work of the convention is before you. The platform of principles adopted by it gives earnest that our party bases its confident hopes for a continuance of your favor upon its purpose and ability to subserve the proper end of government, which is declared by our constitution to be the protection of the citizen in the enjoyment of life, liberty and prosperity. The admirable tickets of worthy, capable and patriotic gentlemen which it presents for your suffrages for the high executive offices, is likewise an assurance of its devotion to these principles. We sincerely trust, therefore, that you will ratify this work of the convention by an overwhelming majority at the polls on the 7th day of August next.

And we congratulate you, fellow citizens, that at present there seems to be no good reason to doubt that this Democratic ascendency will continue and that under it our State will go on prospering and to prosper. What a delightful vista of progress, prosperity and development seems opening to our view. What probabilities are being realized—what possibilities suggested! This is no figment of fancy, no enthusiast's dream. DeTocqueville, viewing our country with calm philosophic eye, wrote; The valey of the Mississippi is, upon the whole, the most magnificent dwelling place prepared by God for man's abode." Why should Alabama not be the choicest part the Eden spot—of this great expanse of territory? She is endowed by nature with every element of State wealth and happiness—a genial, healthful, uniform climate—a soil easily requiting the labor of the husbandman with a generous yield of almost every diversity of product—exhaustless mines pouring into her lap rich treasures of those black diamonds of commerce, and that ore, which more than any other subserves the purposes of mankind—vast forests and regions o magnificant timber, and abundant waterf ways, like great arteries, penetrating and traversing her territory.

And when, in the coming years, her thrifty, industrions, intelligent and patriotic population, encouraged and protected by the benign genius of Democracy, shall have improved her systems of agriculture, developed her mineral resources, established factories,—her cotton mills, with their million spindles, a pillar of cloud by day, her blazing furnaces, a pillar of fire by night, built a net work of railroads sufficient for all the demands of her commerce and the convenience of her people, caused her horn of plenty to be full and over flowing, and general public education to encircle her brow as a laurel cnaplet, who shall say that Alabama will not become the brightest star in the constellation of the Union, the most substantial column in the Parthenon of Liberty?

This glorious consummation is the grand mission of the Democracy. And in view of the start it has taken, and the progress it has made, it does seem that it ought to have encouragement from all, and opposition by none. All the people are protected in all their civil and political rights, the burdens of government are less seriously felt than formerly, and with a continuance of honest, economical and prudent administration, they will be lightened still more, and no check be suffered in our advancement.

But notwithstanding the assurance which the present and past history of the Democratic and Conservative party gives of its future, and notwithstanding it has redeemed all the pledges it made when it came into power again in 1874, we may expect and doubtless have opposition. Our very prosperity will excite the envy and allure the cupidity of Radicalism, and its half brother, Independentism. The field is too inviting, the temptation too great for Republican virtue to resist. Even as Satan insinuated himself into the bowers of Paradise, and tempted man to his fall, and so will our unscrupulous adversary which would hvae thrust upon us the infamous Civil Rights Force Bill, regard no place secure against its pollutting presence, nothing too sacred for its desecrating touch. It may not dare to present Mokanna face unveiled, but may protrude its hydra heads in the thin disguises of Independentism. Greenbackism, or other forms of opposition. Let us be armed with the Ithuriel spear of true Democracy, ready to touch and expose the Protean monstor in all its naked hideousness.

Indifference, aphathy will inspire and embolden opposition, while complete organization and a resolute purpose to combat and defeat it wherever found, will check and deter it. We conjure you then, fellow citizens, by our memories of the past, and our hopes for the future, that discarding all private and personal prejudices and disappointments if any exist, and with an eye single to the promotion of the public welfare, you adhere firmly to the principles of our party and seek vindication of those undying principles in the triumphant election and faithful services of our nominees. Having done this, and when two years hence, we again take the reckoning of our Ship of State, we feel confident that our enemies and opponents shall find nothing to cavil or complain at except that another successful Democratic administration has again belied all their prophesies of evil.

The Republic's Motto.

Prolonged Applause.

The Tariff Commission Bill provoked some very fine speaking, both in the Senate and House, but the peroration of Congressman Blackburn, of Kentuckey, is rather ahead in the flow of sentiment and felicity of expression. Here it is:

"I, too, would have the whir of the engine, the hum or the spindle and the ring of the anvil, but I would mingle with it a joyous song of the contented ploughman as he follows from dawn till dark the turning glebe which must at last give food and sustenance to all. (Applause.) I would have that glorious melody supiemented by the ringing laugh of happy childhood as it gathers at close of day about the farm house door, the vine clad cottage of the machanic and the humble home of the delving minor. I would breathe the face of every honest toiler with the smile that comes of content and thrift, instead of leaving it wet with tears. I would make each citizen of this great land believe that he is the equal of his fellow; I would have him know that he is free commercially free, as well as politically free, wearing no shackles, standing erect, receiving protection from rendering loyal homage to this country upon exact equality with all,[applause]I would make each citizen of ours love his country, not as a mere sentiment but because of its just and equal laws. I would have him feel that he rested secure in his every right beneath the broad protecting aegis of a great, a just, a powerful republic. I would write that republics motto and blazon it upon her shield and give it to the world; I would make it so broad and catholic that parties should not divide upon it, and no man might gainsay. I would make it read: Protection for each citizen abroad, justice and equality for each citizen at home."

Thousands of Blacks Expected to Leave South Carolina this Fall.

Chattanooga Times.

Hon. Wilson Cook, colored of Greenville, S. C. one of the most prominent colored men in the State, an ex- member of the Legislature, and a very wealthy and influential man, passed though the city yesterday morning; enroute to Arkansas.

A TIMES reporter had a short conversation with Mr; Cooke, in the car yesterday morning. He states that he is going West to prospect with a view of making extensive purchases of land for the purposes of planting a large negro colony there. He states that he has already purchased a track on the line of the Fort Smith Railway, where he hopes to have a large colony in a few months. He anticipates an exodus this fall and winter of blacks from South Carolina.

We asked whether he ascribed this exodius to political purposes, and he replied that he did not think anyone was influenced by such motives, but it was merely a desire on their part to find a locality where they can make a livelihood. Land in South Carolina, he says, is well nigh exhausted, and the poor negro, after he pays tribute to his landlord, State and Government has not enough to make ends meet, and it is but natural that he desires a change. Mr. Cooke regards the exodus of last year as a great blessing to South Carolina; it was so general and ominous that the planters became frightened lest they would be in want of sufficient labor to work their cotton, and in consequence more grain was planted than during the past forty years, and the yield will be greater than during the period. This, he thinks, will have the effect of keeping some at home who otherwise would have emigrated. Yet he expects several thousand to leave that State within a year. The exodus will begin early in the fall.

Where Are the Jews to Go?

St Louis Republican.

The Jews world is narrowing down rapidly of late. Russia has become so unpleasant for them, that at least a million of the Hebrew race in that country are anxious to get out of it, and are leaving as fast as they can. Many of them emigrate from the land of their latest persecution without an idea of where they will find rest for the soles of their feet. Any condition anywhere is better than Russian rapine. Many of them find their way to England, and the Mansion house committee in London, send them to America, where, it appears, the best provision possible with the smallest amount of funds can be made for the refugees.. There is a late complaint that too many of them are coming to the United Statas. This was unlooked for, as there is plenty of room, and more work than hands can be found to do. Yet the objection from some quarters might have been expected, too, since the Jews are driven from Russia for the same cause that many want to drive out and exclude the Chinese from this county—their thrift. Human nature is much the same everywhere, and a nationality or a class has only to prove itself superior to the ruling majority in any particular to excite first envy and then hatred, and then comes persecution. So there is already a cloud in the West, threatening the free and unrestricted immigration of the Russian Jewish refugees. Now there is an obstacle in the way of their going East, and Turkey is the rock ahead. It seems that the Messianic idea took possession of a large number of the Russian Jews, and their teachers encouraged it. It involved a general colonization in Palestine, and agents were sent ahead to prepare for the exodus to their ancient heritage and promised land. In persuance of this plan, two hundred of them in a body started to the land of their fathers, and reached Constantinople on their way. Here they were faced by an edict of the autocrat of the Ottoman Empire, forbidding them to settle in Palestine and the further prosecution of the journey was abandoned. There is no present objection to their remaining in Turkey, but let them go there and prosper beyond the neigh boring Turks, and there is nothing left for them but to move on somewhere. But where are the chosen people to go, and be at peace?

Campaign Platforms.

Burlington Hawkeye

"Julia" wants to know "what a party platform is? Well, a platform, Julia, is one preamble and twenty resolutions, strong in non-essentials, vague in essentials; round the bush on tariff. and rough as thunder on the Mormons: clamorous for civil service reform; down on corruption, loud in its praise of purity, and determined to have it if it takes every cent the party can raise. The platform you understand, Julia, is a legitimate and necessary part of the campaign pimp circumstance, it goes along with the banners, transpariencies and torches, and when the campaign is over—well, it is stored away in the cellar or garret along with the rest of the uniforms and torches. A campaign platform is very much like the campaign torch, indeed, it gives out a great deal of smell and smoke, with a very uncertain, flickering light.

There has been an extraordinary outburst of sun spots within the last ten days. Last week a spot resembling in its general appearance and its position upon the disc the great spot that accompanied the magnetic storms of April, crept slowly around the eastern edge of the sun, advanced with the resolution of the orb, until a few days ago it was well suited for observation. The area covered by this outburst of spots of a trianguar figure containing, in round numbers, a thousand million of square miles of the solar surface. The disturbed region is visible as a black dot without a telescope, when the eye is protected by a smoked or deeply colored glass.

"I declare!" exclaimed Fogg at the dinner table to day "this is the most affectionate pie I ever saw." Affectionate pie?" cried every one at the table, including the landlady. "Yes,,, saig Fogg the upper and lower crusts are so confounded affectionate that they couldn't get any thing between them."—Boston Transcript.

The rolling mills of the Pittsburg; Pa., employ eighteen thousand nine hundred hands. Capitol to the amount of twenty million dollars is invested, and its annual product is thirty million dollars.

The Rome, Ga., Courier says the best evidence that tha South presents the best field for cotton manufacture is in the fact that the Southern mills run profitably on time, while Northern mills have to curtail their production.

Atlanta correspondence Augusta Ev. News: Atlanta is to have an olemargarine factory. A stock company with $100,000 capital has been organized. $40,000 of the stock was taken by New Yorkers and $60,000 by prominent citizens of Atlanta. The company has purchased a lot of land just beyond the exposition grounds, and will commence at once the erection of their factory.

The Money of the World.

Director Burchard, of the United States Mint estimates the world's productions of gold for the calendar year of 1881 at $107,000,000 and silver $87,500.000.

The consumption of the world in ornamentation, manufactures and arts is estimated for the same period at $75.000,000 gold and $35,000,000 in silver.

The estimated circulation in the principal countries of the world is placed at: Gold, $5.221.000,000; full legal tender silver, $2,155 000 000; limited tenders, $423,000.000; total specie, $5.757.000,000; paper, $3,644.000.000; making the total circulation, including the amount held in Government securities and banks and in active circulation, $9,403,000,000.

As there are about 1,500.000,000 of the people in the world it follows that if the cash in coin and paper was equally divided every man, woman and child would have nearly $7. So, when you haven't that much money in your purse you have less than your share, and when you have a gold eagle you have $3 more than your share. It is a great mistake to suppose that the world owes any one a living. That can be only got by hard toil of brain or hands.

The time for the redemption of the Selma, Rome and Dalton Railroad and lands has expired, and so far as we know, the second mortgage bondholders have not redeemed. The lands can now be sold, whenever the company owning them think proper. We guess they will advertise them when they put them on the market.

The Birmingham Observer comes to us this week in an entirely new dress and much enlarged. It is now one of the handsomest papers in the State. Its make up, both editorial and mechanical, is good, yea, very good. We are glad to see this evidence of thift in our Birmingham neighbor.

Calhoun seems to have become a great lumber centre. We learn the Camp Bros., at Weavers Station, are sawing a bill of two million feet to be shipped to Philadelphia. Shipping so far is a good indication that our yellow pine is very fine.

There is strong talk of organizing a Marriage Insurance Company in Jacksonville. Indeed all the preliminary steps have been taken, and, in future, the young men of Cleburne, Calhoun, Talladega, Cherokee, Etowah, St. Clair and all over this section of the State can come to Jacksonville and get an assurance of a pretty little fortune on mariage, and, what is bettar, get the money when they marry.

The Republican party of Calhoun had a meeting in the court house Tuesday, and appointed delegates to the State Republican Convention. Not one white Radical deigned to go near. Some white Democrats went to the court house and gave the colored people the benefit of their advice, to the effect that while they might cling to the Republican party as a National organization, they should in all local measures co-operate and vote with the Democrats, which met with the approbation of the meeting We address this remark to the Radical fools of the North: "What is to prevent the superior intelligence of the South from getting the better of the negro to his good?"

The other day as we were passing the Hotel, with our walking stick in our hand, a gentleman asked us if we did not wish our initials engraved on it, with date &c. - that he would do it and not charge us anything for it: and when he said that. we told him, of course we did, and handed it to him, and you just 'bet' he did it up in style. If you wish any engraving done, a watch repaired, a ring mended or a clock put in order, call on Mr. James Mitchell and you can be accommodated.

We have seen a notification from the Land Office at Huntsville to a party who lives in the Montgomery district, but near the line, to the effect that his land entry would be declared vacant if not completed by a stated time, when in fact it had already been completed two year ago It seems that certain entries have got on the books of both offices. We wrote to Mr. Cross, the Register of the Land Office at Huntsville, to know what it meant, and he replied that where parties held the Receiver's certificate from the Montgomery office it was all right. But we would suggest to parties, who receive these notifications, to reply by postal card, informing Mr. Cross that they have perfected their entry, where such is the case.

We have received a pamphlet price list of the Coldine Company, manufacturers of amateur printing presses. It carries for its motto, "every man his own printer—every boy a Ben. Franklin." It takes something more than type and press to be this. It takes brains and a long and very careful training under the eye of a practical printer. One may as well claim that he could put the Greek Grammar in the hands of his boy and thus learn him that language, as that he could make a printer out of him by simply putting the tools in his hand. To be a printer is to have a polite education.

The Medical Society of Calhoun county will meet in Jacksonville, Ala., Tuesday the 4th day of July, 1882. The members are requested to be present, as business of importance will come before the Society.

All physicians of the county are cordially invited to attend.

NOTICE.—A meeting of the Republican party is hereby called to be held at the court house at Jacksonville on the 1st day of July, for the purpose of appointing delegates to the State Convention, to be held at Mongromery on Thursday the 6th day of July.

Albany News: Capt. Griff Stephens, at whose mill, on Broad Street, it was ground, reports the bringing in of several bushels of this year's corn yesterday. ENTIRE CONSECRATION.

Suggested by Hearing a Soul-stirring Sermon by Rev. W. R. Kirk, June 25th.

BY INEZ AND WILLIE.

O God, we would be Thine!
We'd consecrate each golden hour
That spans the eastern sky of life,
And give to Thee youth's greatest power
And rid our hearts of sin and strife;
Yet, Lord, we are so weak, so weak;
Our feeble hands can nothing seek Without Thy power divine.

Help, Lord! Draw us to Thee!
We'd closer come, yet closer cling!
Our barque would sink—the angels sing
A requium soon, that, buried here
Beneath the waves of dark despair,
Two souls had drifted from their Lord so dear
Had wrecked and ruined on the ocean drear.

Lord, shall our cry be "LOST!"
Unblind our eyes! Show us so plain
Just where we are—just where should be,
That bearing all of earthly gain
We'll fly with mind, heart, soul to Thee.
Resting not here—but further still—
We'll climb the steeps of Zion's hill
By working Lord for Thee.

We are sorry, as well as annoyed, that our correspondents will persist in putting off sending in their contributions until Thursday—too late for insert on in the week's issue. We have just received one from Weavers Station which we would be glad to publish, but have only room for the closing sentence, as follows

"The school at Weaver's is the finest in Calhoun as a village school, numbering 50 scholars. There is not a more moral or complaisant village in Alabama. It is incorruptible, undefiled; and its merits are always in bright array. Prof Jim Watson is now preparing to build him an elegant residence and become one in our midst. He contemplates a permanency. There is no better place to educate your children than at Weavers Station." EARNEST.

Republican County Convention.

In pursuance of a call of the Executive committee of Calhoun county of the Republican party, a county Convention was held at Jacksonville on the 26th June.

Upon motion of Lewis W. McKenzie John Miles was elected permanent chairman and Cicero Ellis Secretary.

After organization and the enrollment of names of delegates, Lewis W. McKenzie moved that a committee of three be appointed to select delegates, subject to the approval and confirmation of the Convention, to represent them in the Republican State Convention to be held the 6th of July in the City of Montgomery. The Chair appointed Burwell Slayton, Cicero Elston and George Green said committee.

The committee after consideration reported the name of Gen. Jos. W. Burke as the delegate, and L. W. McKenzie alternate

On motion of Jerre Carr the report of the committee was received and adopted.

Upon hearing the report of the committee, Lewis McKenzie, in a few appropriate remarks thanked the Convention for its confidence in him, and assured all that every energy and the most determined effort should be used to promote and advance the interests of the people, irr specitive of party. not in a partizan view. but in a general course for a common good, and the welfare of a common people.

Upon suggestion of L. W. McKenzie, Hon. L. W. Grant, State Senator, spoke to the Convention. His remarks were replete with sound sense and wisdom. While proclaiming his decided democracy, he exhorted the Convention to banish from their minds all prejudice of race or partizanship, and unite in advancing the great interest of a State in which all, of every color and party, were alike interested.

There being no farther business, upon motion of L. W. McKenzie, the convention adjourned sine die.

A Talk with Bishop Sharp.

From New York Tribune.

Bishop John Sharp, of Salt Lake City, Utah, was seen at the St. Nicholas Hotel yesterday, and being asked how the Mormons regarded the appointment of the Utah Commission, the Bishop replied that its members had been chosen since he left home He had no doubt that they would go to Utah and perform the duties which devolved upon them, and that the Mormon people would simply submit to what they did.

"It is to be hoped that the Commission will begin its work speedily," said he. "You see, the passage of the Edmunds bill made all our registering offices vacant, and we can hold no elections until these are filled. of course, by men appointed by the Commission, and it is desirable that everything should be ready for our elections in August."

"Will not this bill prove disastrous to Mormonism?"

"No, not at all. Poligamy will after a while be done away with: as it is now. a poligamist can no longer hold office. The Mormon church will not suffer particularly."

"Then poligamy must go?"

"Certainly. People are no readier to risk a term in the State prison in Utah than they are in any other State."

"Will there be any movement among the Mormons to leave the Salt Lake City; to seek a new home for the faith, as they have done before?"

"No; everything that they have is in Salt Lake City, and what is there cannot be moved."

The Genuine Gentleman.

"The essential characteristics of a gentleman," says Mr. Mathews, "are not an outward varnish or veneer, but inward qualities developed in the heart"

The drover was a gentleman at heart and in speech, also, of whom this anecdote is told: He was driving cattle to market one day when the snow was deep, save on the highway. The drove compelled a lady to turn out of the road and tread in the deep snow.

"Madam," said the drover, taking off his hat, "if the cattle knew as well as I what they should do, you would not walk in the snow."

Charles Lamb tells a story of Joseph Paice, a London merchant who reverenced womanhood in every form in which it came before him.

"I have seen him," writes the genial essayist, "stands bare headed (smile, if you please,) to a servant girl while she has been enquiring of him the way to some street, in such a posture of unforced civility as neither to embarrass her in the acceptance or himself in the offer of it.

"I have seen him," he continues, "tenderly escort a market-woman whom he had encountered in a shower, exalting his umbrella over her poor basket of fruit that it might receive no damage, with as much carefulness as if she had been a countess."

These anecdotes show what genuine politeness is. It is a kindly spirit which expresses itself kindly to all Of one who possesses it the remark is never made: "He can be a gentleman when he pleases." As Mr. Mathews says—and we wish the boys to memorize the saying—"He who can be a gentleman when he pleases, never pleases to be anything else."

CROSS PLAINS LOCALS.

"Aint it hot?" This interrogatory greets your ears on all sides. Of course its hot, and if it keeps on at the rate of the past ten days, it will be sizzling hot.

The event of the week was the examination exercises of Prof. Stark's school. Everything connected with this examination was such a brilliant success that your reporter don't think it nesessary to attempt a description in detail.

Suffice us to say, the recitations proved that the pupils had been thoroughly and systemmatically taught in the various branches of study. The large audiences, notwithstanding the successively warm weather, also proved that our people feel a deep interest in the cause of education. The patrons of the school were not only satisfied, they were delighted, and vote the accomplished faculty their most heart-felt thanks for their untiring effort; and are rejoiced at the great prosperity of the school.

The sermon Tuesday night, by Rev. V. O. Hawkins was a very able discourse on character: his text being the fifth verse of the sixth chapter of Daniel. Taking the chapter of Daniel as an illustration, he showed us a very clear and forcible manner, what were the elements which make up a true and noble character, such as Daniel maintained through a long life. He exhorted the young men to cultivate such a character. The discourse was full of wisdom and good counsel and was listened to with the most profound attention.

Wednesday morning at 11 o'clock another very large audience filled the house to listen to the brilliant and eloquent address of Capt Jno. M. Caldwell, of Jacksonville. His subject was modern culture; and, as on all other occasions the speaker was at home, handling his subject with a master hand. I will not attempt an outline of this magnificent discourse, but will say, that the large audience showed their appreciation by giving the speaker their undivided attention throughout.

Wednesday night the grand concert—exhibition closed the exercises—and here my pen halts I must not attempt to describe this magnificent exhibition for I cannot do it justice. Vast crowds came from all over the country—there was scarcely standing room and hundreds were turned away to their great disappointment. The exercises continued until a late hour, and notwithstanding the house was densely packed and the heat intense, the crowd did not diminish any There was music, singing, charades, tableaus, and the calisthenic drill of the whole school. The latter is a beautiful exercise and should be taught in all our schools. Besides being a pleasant recreation to the children, it develops the body and imparts grace of motion. To Misses Dunn and Caller, the accomplished teachers, and their pupils, the people feel indebted for an evening of real enjoyment. May we all enjoy many more such. OCCASIONAL Guiteau's Characteristic Speech to be Delivered from the Scaffold.

WASHINGTON, June 27.—Guiteau has prepared a characteristic speech to deliver from the gallows with manifold copies for the press. He says he is not sorry that he shot Garfield, as he was inspired to do it. He expects God to save him yet by a miracle. He has no hope of human help and expects his future life to be happy. Hicks thinks Guiteau, since these expressions, is perfectly sane.

ATLANTA GA., June 57.—W. L. Clark, editor of the Republican, was cowhided by Ed. McCanless this morning. Clark stated in his paper that. in the Shields trial, "the evidence of McCanless and Venable was not genuine. It was strained and improbable."

Envy is a vice, which keeps no holiday, but is always on the wheel and wording its own disquiet.

It is one of the worst errors to suppose that there is any other path of safety except that of duty.

Don't be anxious until you are compelled to be; many a man worries about a ghost that never appears.

The first step towards making a man of your son is to train him to earn what he spends; the next best step is to teach him to save his earnings.

TATE SPRINGS.

Health and Pleasure for Alabamians.

Already fourteen States are represented by the guests in attendance at Tate Springs, East Tennessee. A good company has been there all winter and has rapidly increased since the 1st of March. The demand for the water has doubled in the past six months, and is being shipped now to all points of the union at the rate of 2,000 bbls. per. annum. We have seen no natural mineral water so strongly endorsed as a remedial agent for dyspepsia and diseases of the liver, stomach, bowels and kidneys. Our doctors prescribe it and hundreds in Alabama are daily drinking the water at home and can attest its power over disease. When the summer travel sets in, more of our Alabama "summer resorters" will be found at Tate Springs than at any other resort outside of the State. Dr. J. S. Weatherly of Montgomery, is resident physician. The new building is all complete and furnished Send for for large 40 page pamphlet containing full information on all points. Messrs. AGRICULTURE.

THE USE OF MILK.—Doctor Crosby, of the Bellevue Hospital, pronounces milk an article of diet which persons may use, under all conditions. There are those who say they cannot take milk, that it makes them bilious, etc., but he declares that this is not true. A person who is sick may take milk with the greatest possible advantage, because it contains in the form of assimilation, all the elements essential for maintaining nutrition. It is the aliment of the young animal, and certainly answers a good purpose for the old animal, provided it is used properly, and not poured into a stomach already over filled, as though it had in itself no substance or richness. New milk, as he does not hesitate to say, may be taken—as far as disease is concerned—in nearly every condition. Perhaps it will require the addition of a spoonful or two of lime-water. The addition of a little salt will often prevent the after-feeling of fullness and "wind on the stomach," which some complain of. If marked acidity of the stomach is present, then, perhaps, a little gentian may be requisite to stimulate the stomach somewhat, and it may be necessary to give it in small quantities, and repeat it often, but ice-cold milk can be put into a very irritable stomach, if given in small quantities and at short intervals, with the happiest effect. It is used in case of fever, which formerly it was thought to "feed," and when scalded it has a desirable effect in summer complaints. But it is an article of diet for people in health, and who wish to remain in that happy condition, that milk should be the most appreciated. For the midday lunch of those whose hearty meal comes at night, or for the supper of those who dine at noon, nothing is so good. The great variety and excellent quality of prepared cereals give a wide choice of food to use with milk. Bread—with berries in their season or baked sweet apples—boiled rice, cracked wheat, oatmeal, hull corn, or hominy taken a generous bowl of pure cold milk, makes the best possible light meal in warm weather for children, and for adults who have not some positive physical idiosyncrasy that prevents them from digesting it. The men of the firmest health and longest life are the men of regular and simple habits, and milk is a standing article in such a diet.

FRUIT CELLARS.—In order to keep fruit several conditions are important. In the first place, the atmosphere of a fruit room should be dry. There should be no more dampness than ordinarily exists in the cold outside air. The room should be susceptible of ventilation in proper weather; not by direct currents of air, but by air medified before it reaches the fruit. A fruit room must be frost proof; it must be cleanly and accessible. As regards location, it may be placed on a side hill, the excavation opening to the south; or it may be placed under a barn or stable or other convenient outbuilding. Ten years ago we constructed a fruit cellar under our stable, and it has proved so satisfactory that we venture to give a brief description of it. The division walls are constructed of brick, and the apartments are two in number—an outer and an inner room. The outer room is but partly underground and is 10x12 feet in area and 8 feet high. The inner room is wholly underground and frost proof. It has four brick walls and a cemented floor. In this room the fruit is stored early in December, when the weather becomes cold. The outer room holds the fruit during the autumn months after it is gathered, and it is cool, well lighted and dry. The windows are left open, and a free circulation of air allowed so long as no danger from frost exists. When the fruit is taken to the inner room, the door is closed and no light admitted. Ventilation is secured in moderate weather by opening the inner door and throwing down a window in the outer room. In this cellar we kept apples of last season's growth until the present winter in perfect condition. Some of these apples, exhibited at the autumn agricultural fairs, were pronounced as fresh as those of the past season's growth.

HOW TO MAKE FARMING PAY.—In a prize essay bearing on the above subject, Mr. R. Bruce, Great Smeaton, Northallerton, recapitulates as follows the several ways by which farmers in Great Britain can make their profession a paying one; First, by greater attention to the cultivation of the soil, working more as gardeners do in a thorough manner. Greater attention must also be given to the quality of the different seeds sown, making sure that the best obtainable are put in the soil, and that the kind sown suits the soil and climate. Secondly, by greater attention to the live stock kept, making determined efforts to keep only stock of good quality, and breeding more from good sires; keeping them better and more comfortable, and getting them ready for the butcher at an early age. Thirdly, by paying greater attention to dairy produce, making sure that the most is made of it, and that what is made is of the best quality. Fourthly, by greater attention to so called little things, such as fruit, poultry and bees.

DIPPING SHEEP.—The effect of a dip is to free the sheep from all external parasites as ticks, scab, etc., and skin diseases, the causes of some of which are not fully understood. A dip of twelve pounds of tobacco and six pounds of flour of sulphur, to fifty gallons of water, is one that has been so generally used, that it can be recommended. Some add to this a little concentrated lye, a pound or so, and about the same quantity of arsenic. If arsenic is used, proper caution should be exercised, and the poisonous nature of the mixture kept in mind. The sheep are dipped while the mixture is warm. Those who have had experience claim that the dip of tobacco and sulphur will do all that can be accomplished by the use of arsenic. It may not be generally understood that sulphur does not dissolve in the dip; hence, in order that each sheep may get its share, the mixture, while in use, should be frequently stirred up from the bottom, and the sulphur thus thoroughly diffused.

HORSES can be educated to the extent of their understanding, as are children, and can be easily damaged or ruined by bad management. We believe that the difference found in horses as to vicious habits and reliability, comes much more from the different management of men than from variance or natural disposition in animals. Horses with high mettle are more easily educated than those of less or dull spirits, and are more susceptible to ill training and consequently may be made good or bad, according to the education they receive.

MICE holes in the walls and closets should be first filled with lime and afterward plastered over with plaster of Paris mixed with water. It is a good plan to keep a paper of the latter in every house, as it is useful in filling cracks, and in many other ways in household economy.

PIGS farrowed in May will do better than those that come in earlier, unless the early pigs are carefully sheltered and kept warm. When once a pig is stunted by cold and neglect it is apt to remain backward. Young pigs should never be weaned until moderate weather has well set in.

DOMESTIC.

CLARET JELLY.—One bottle of claret, the juice and rind of one lemon, one small pot of red currant jelly, half a pound of loaf sugar, an ounce of isinglass (rather more in hot weather), a wineglass of brandy; boil together for a few minutes, taking care that the currant jelly is perfectly dissolved and thoroughly mixed with the other ingredients. Ten minutes will generally effect this, but a good deal depends on the general temperature; strain into a mould and let it grow cold. Serve with cream sauce as follows: Half a pint of cream sweetened with vanilla pods (not bottled essences) whisked to a stiff froth; pour round the jelly, not over it. Half these quantities will fill a mould large enough for six persons.

Uncle Sam's Men.

Uncle Sam's letter-carriers are a hard working set of men, and are liable to contract rheumatism because of the constant exposure to which they are subjected. Calling at the post-office the reporter had a pleasant conversation with Mr. J. H. Mattern, one of the most popular and clever letter-carriers in Indianapolis. Mr. Mattern said that, while in the army during the civil war, he sprained one of his ankles, which was always worse in the spring during the period of the rapid changes in the weather. He did not find much relief from the several remedies he applied. But two years ago he hit upon St. Jacob's Oil, and experienced wonderful relief from its use. Several applications of the Great German Remedy relieved him entirely. The reporter talked with others among the letter carriers and found that the great German Remedy was popular in the post-office. They use it for sore feet, rheumatism, etc., and praise it highly.—Indianapolis (Ind.) News.

GOLDEN EGGS.—Eggs are invaluable in an impromptu dinner, and golden eggs are not only very nice but very pretty. Boil some eggs thoroughly hard then cut them in half, and place them yolk downward upon a deep dish—a glass one, if it is strong enough to bear heat, is more enticing—ranged carefully in rows, like little white mounds. A sauce is made by frying an onion with curry powder and adding stock, thickening it and straining it over the eggs. This pretty dish should be accompanied by boiled rice, but should not be garnished with it, as the bordering of rice takes away from the light appearance of the eggs in constrast with the golden gravy.

VELVET PUDDING.—Take five eggs and beat them separately then add one cup of sugar to the yolks. Take four tablespoonfuls of cornstarch dissolved in a little cold milk, and add this to the yolks and sugar; boil three pints of milk and add the other ingredients while boiling; remove from the fire when it becomes quite thick; flavor with vanilla, and pour into a baking dish; beat the whites of the eggs to a stiff froth, add half a cup of fine white sugar, turn this over the pudding and place in the oven and let brown slightly. To be eaten with sauce made of the yolks of two eggs, one cup of sugar, tablespoonful of butter; beat well, add one cup of boiling milk, set on the stove until it comes to a boiling heat; flavor with vanilla.

We see in the New York Spirit of the Times mention of the cure of Mr. George Drake, 46 Fifth street, Indianapolis, Ind., of a severe case of water rheumatism, by the use of St Jacob's Oil.—Cincinnati Enquirer.

A VERY pretty way to cover an old-fashioned square stand (and almost every home has at least one) is to put over the top smoothly a fine piece of scarlet or blue silesia or cambric; over this put a cover of any pretty open work lace or muslin. Then put a piece of the silesia about thirteen inches deep around it; cover this also with the lace; the effect is excellent, and in this way a useful article of furniture is redeemed from positive ugliness and deformity. If the legs are scratched or marred, a coat or two of varnish will make them look all right.

AN appetizing way to serve eggs for breakfast is to scollop them. Boil them hard, chop them not too fine. Line a pudding dish with a layer of crumbs, then a layer of cold boiled ham, or bits of fried ham chopped fine, then a layer of eggs, and so on until the dish is full. Moisten with cream and a little butter, season with pepper and salt, set in a hot oven for ten minutes, no longer; When thoroughly heated take out and send to the table in the dish, or on slices of buttered toast. Pour a little boiling water over the toast after it is buttered.

A NOVELTY in the way of pie is made of rice flour: Boil one quart of milk, mix with a little cold milk one small teacup of rice flour; when free from lumps add to the boiling milk; add also two tablespoonfuls of melted butter; let it boil for three or four minutes, then take from the stove; when cold stir in five eggs, beaten light, sugar to suit the taste, flavor with vanilla. Bake in a quick oven; make no upper crust, but a rich under one. If you choose, you can reserve the whites of three eggs for a meringue for the top of the pie.

ICING.—Whites of three eggs, three cupfuls of sugar, one teaspoonful of vanilla, three teaspoonfuls of lemon juice. Pour half a pint of boiling water on the sugar and let it boil until clear and almost candied. Beat the eggs to a stiff froth, and stir them into the boiling syrup; remove from the fire and beat thoroughly until it becomes a stiff froth; add the lemon juice, and when perfectly cold add the vanilla. Spread it between the layers and on the top and sides of the cake.

DO NOT throw away the bits of toilet soap which are too small to be used when bathing, or which are usually put into the slop jar. There is nothing so satisfactory to use for the purpose of cleaning oil-cloth and finger marks on paint. Put the little pieces in hot water and let them dissolve. The suds thus made will not attack the varnish as that does which is made from common coarse soap. Keep a bowl in some convenient place to hold these bits of soap.

PUMPKIN PIE.—Three tablespoonfuls stewed pumpkin, one tablespoonful of flour, one egg, a pinch of salt, a little ginger and other spice to suit the taste. Be careful to put in so little that the pies will not taste of any one in particular. Take out of the oven as soon as the pie is well baked, which will be when it rises in an oval in the middle.

WHEN cooking onions, put a tin cup of vinegar on the stove to boil, and there will be no disagreeable odor.

HUMOROUS.

STATE rights: Yesterday afternoon old Judge Logan and Tom Hyde happened to meet on Austin avenue, when Tom, who noticed that the old gentleman, who belongs to a very aristocratic Kentucky family, looked very much depressed, inquired what was the matter.

"That flood," said the old man, shaking his head.

"Yes, there will be a great deal of suffering and much loss of life."

"That don't bother me, but to think that southern people have to take rations from the Federal government. It's disgraceful. It nearly kills me to think of it."

"I don't know about that. I took rations from the Federal Government and I'd do it again if I had a chance."

"When did you have occasion to take rations from the Federals?"

"During the war, when I was with Jackson. General Banks issued them to us." The smile that lit up the old man's face was like a gleam of sunshine on some ancient ruin.

"I'm All Played Out,"

is a common complaint. If you feel so, get a package of Kidney Wort and take it and you will at once feel its tonic power. It renews the healthy action of the kidneys, bowels and liver, and thus restores the natural life and strength to the weary body. It can now be had in either dry or liquid form, and in either way is always prompt and efficient in action.—New Bedford Standard.

JOURNALISTIC courtesy; "Which editor do I want to see?" asked a young man who was smoking a cigarette and wore a hat about the size and shape of a tablespoon, as he opened the door of the editorial rooms and gazed about him.

"Well," said the trotting horse reporter, ceasing for an instant his labors in connection with a sketch of the life and career of Passaic, "you look as if you really ought to see the editor of the club, but probably I am mistaken. As a general friend of humility, however, I would advise you to shoot the torch."

"Do what, sir?" inquired the young man.

"Shoot the torch—put out that dizzy little street pipe."

"Do you mean this cigarette?" asked the visitor.

"That's it," was the reply. "You just drop that thing or else sherry yourself around the corner. We get enough cigarette smoke from young ducks that come around here Saturdays with society items."

AN Austin teacher was instructing his class in natural history.

"To what class of people does the hawk belong?"

"To the birds of prey," was the reply.

"To what class does quail belong?"

There was a pause. The teacher repeated the question.

"Where does the quail belong?"

"On toast," yelled the hungry boy at the foot of the class.

"HOW much quinine can you take at a dose?" inquired one malarious individual of another as they met on the street one morning.

"Oh, not more'n about four grains. If I take any more it sets my head to working."

"Does it? I should think you would take six grains twice a day, so's to be sure the old thing worked, you know."

IMPURE BLOOD.—In morbid conditions of the blood are many diseases; such as salt rheum, ring-worm, boils, carbuncles, sores, ulcers and pimples. In this condition of the blood try the VEGETINE, and cure these affections. As a blood purifier it has no equal. Its effects are wonderful.

SEEING beyond the nose: "No, indeed, I'm not going to learn how to make bread," said a New Haven belle. "Girls who know how to make bread generally marry men who can't afford to buy flour to make it with, and they have got to work in a milliner's shop to help pay the board bill. I'll stick to my fancy work."

"Lottie, my dear," remonstrated her mother, "remember this is not leap year."

BALTIMORE, MD., May 4, 1879.

MR. STEVENS:

Dear Sir: I have, in the spring of the year, a faint, sinking feeling in the stomach, and this spring have been so weak that I felt the need of something. Loss of Appetite, Lassitude and General Debility.

BOSTON, Mass., May 11, 1879.

MR. JOSEPH R. GROSE:

Dear Sir: Your cordial recommendation of VEGETINE as a Spring Medicine and Blood Purifier induced me to give it a thorough trial, and I candidly admit that in my experience it is all you have claimed for it. My daughter has always been afflicted with Scrofula humor in a very severe form, and particularly in spring was badly troubled with Loss of Appetite, Lassitude and General Debility. The VEGETINE had the desired effect and we are never without it. Its success was so apparent in this case that many of my friends and relatives have also tried it, with general satisfaction. The Popular Demand.

So great has been the popular demand for the celebrated remedy Kidney-Wort, that it is having an immense sale from Maine to California. It has precisely the same effect as the dry, but is very concentrated so that the dose is much smaller.—Lowell Mail.

RADWAY'S

Sarsaparillian Resolvent.

Pure blood makes sound flesh, strong bone, and a clear skin. If you would have your flesh firm, your bones sound, without caries, and your complexion fair, use RADWAY'S SARSAPARILLIAN RESOLVENT.

A remedy composed of ingredients of extraordinary medical properties essential to purify, repair and invigorate the broken-down and wasted body—QUICK, PLEASANT, SAFE and PERMANENT in its treatment and cure.

No matter by what name the complaint may be designated, whether it be Scrofula, Consumption, Syphilis, Ulcers, Sores, Tumors, Boils, Erysipelas, Bladder, Womb, Skin, Liver, Stomach or Bowels, either chronic or constitutional, the virus of the disease is in the BLOOD which supplies the waste, and builds and repairs these organs and wasted tissues of the system. If the blood is unhealthy, the process of repair must be unsound.

THE SARSAPARILLIAN RESOLVENT not only is a compensating remedy, but secures the harmonious action of each of the organs. It establishes throughout the entire system functional harmony, and supplies the blood-vessels with a pure and healthy current of new life. The skin, after a few days use of the Sarsaparillian, becomes clear and beautiful. Pimples, Blotches, Black Spots and Skin Eruptions are removed; Sores and Ulcers soon cured. Persons suffering from Scrofula, Eruptive Diseases of the Eyes, Mouth, Ears, Legs, Throat and Glands, that have accumulated and spread, either from uncured diseases or mercury, or from the use of Corrosive Sublimate, may rely upon a cure if the Sarsaparillian is continued a sufficient time to make its impression on the system

One bottle contains more of the active principles of Medicines than any other Preparation, taken in teaspoonful doses, while others require five or six times as much.

ONE DOLLAR PER BOTTLE.

Travelers should always carry a bottle of Radway's Ready Relief with them. A few drops in water will prevent sickness or pains from change of water. It is better than French Brandy or Bitters as a stimulant.

Miners and Lumbermen should always be provided with it.

CAUTION.

All remedial agents capable of destroying life by an overdose should be avoided. Morphine, opium, strychnine, arnica, hyoscianus, and other powerful remedies, do at certain times, in very small doses, relieve the patient during their action in the system. But perhaps the second dose, if repeated, may aggravate and increase the suffering, and another dose cause death. There is no necessity for using these uncertain agents when a positive remedy like Radway's Ready Relief will stop the most excruciating pain quicker, without entailing the least difficulty in either infant or adult.

THE TRUE RELIEF.

RADWAY'S READY RELIEF is the only remedial agent in vogue that will instantly stop pain.

MY MOTHER'S GRAVE.

The trembling dew-drops fall
Upon the shutting flowers; like stars at rest
The stars shine gloriously; and all,
Save me, are blest.

Mother, I love thy grave!
The violet with its blossoms, blue and mild,
Waves o'er thy head; when shall it wave

'Tis a sweet flower, yet must
Its bright leaves to the coming tempest bow!
Dear mother, 'tis thine emblem; dust
Is on thy brow.

And I could love to die;
To leave untasted life's dark, bitter streams—
By thee, as erst in childhood, lie
And share thy dreams.

But I must linger here
To stain the plumage of my sinless years,
And mourn the hopes to childhood dear,
With bitter tears.

Aye, I must linger here,
A lonely branch upon a withered tree,
Whose last frail leaf, untimely sere,
Went down with thee.

Oft from life's withered bower,
In still communion with the past, I turn
And muse on thee, the only flower
In memory's urn.

And when the evening pale
Bows, like a mourner, on the dim blue wave,
I stray to hear the night-winds wail,
Around thy grave.

HIS WORD OF HONOR.

The "Green Dragon," at Orpington, assumed to be an inn, was really little more than a wayside stopping place. Mr. Hunter, landlord and proprietor, was therefore not a little surprised and flurried when, upon a raw October afternoon, a young man presented himself at the bar of the "Green Dragon," and asked languidly if he could be accommodated with a bed and a sitting-room.

"A bed, sir?" replied Mr. Hunter, a big man with red face and gray hair; "yes I think we can manage to give you a bed."

"And a sitting-room?" echoed the landlord, in a tone of one who is considering some great undertaking; "one minute if you please sir."

And Mr. Hunter disappeared into the little room adjoining the bar, there to hold counsel with some second persons, the upshot being that, in a few minutes, Mrs. Hunter and a few Hunters just out of the crawling state, issued forth, bearing respectively working materials, socks in process of being mended, in whistles and decapitated dolls.

"You can have this room all to yourself sir," said Mr. Hunter, triumphantly

"You really must not let me disturb you," replied the traveler.

"Don't you mention it," replied the landlord, in a tone which was at once genial and confidential; "we would not turn a customer away from our doors. You see we do not have much parlor company."

"And this is the only room you have that is disengaged?"

"Well, yes, sir; this is the only room at present. Susan! coals for the gentleman's fire."

The traveler was glad enough to enter the apartment and to draw close to the fire the one dilapidated arm-chair.

Arthur Seton, barrister by profession, and a writer from choice, was not really more than thirty, though he looked considerably older; for the dark hair and beard were streaked with gray, and the face, with its regular handsome features wore a look of intense mental weariness.

For some time he leaned indolently back, his hands clasped behind his head; at last he rose and took from his bag a locket and diary, which he opened, and availing himself of pen and ink which stood upon the table, made the following entry;

"October 17, 1874.—Got up late. Called on the Brainstones; George was out. Had a pleasant chat with Annie; went like a fool to Richmond, and like a fool, haunted the well-house. It looked just the same as in the old, dear days; but I heard children playing in the garden. The house I believe is let to city people. Came back to London; dined at the Pall Mall; went to the club. Got back to chambers late; wrote a column 'Review.' A weary, weary day. Shall I never know a moment's forgetfulness?"

He drew then from the leaves of the diary a letter written in a delicate hand and addressed, "Arthur Seton, Esq., 12 Gray's Inn." This letter he regarded with a long, sad, loving look; then, resting his head on his hand, he read it through very slowly. It ran as follows:

"MY DEAR ARTHUR:—If you will be so suspicions, so jealous and exciting, I cannot see how we are ever to be happy. Faith without works is dead, and love without faith is no blessing, but a weary burden. I am tired of cross words and looks. Some women, I believe, like the feverish excitement of quarrels, but I only wish for peace. This miserable jealousy is quite unworthy of you. Do try and put it from you; and remember that love, once wounded, is sometimes hurt past hope of recovery. I received your article quite safely, but I cannot speak about it now. You have made me too sad, too weary, and even a little indignant. Yours affectionately,

ALICE CLAREFIELD."

He replaced the letter, closed the diary, took up his pipe and began smoking. The early part of this day had been fine and mild, but toward the afternoon the sky grew leaden and the wind shifted to the northeast. Now the wind was rising and the rain was falling—a cold, penetrating, impetuous, determined rain.

For want of something better to do, Seton began to write a letter; but he made slow work of it. For minutes together he sat holding the pen listlessly, leaning his arm wearily upon the table listening, as we all listen when alone, to what sounds may be going on near us, from a feeling that is not curiosity, but more overpowering.

Suddenly what must have been a very light vehicle dashed swiftly down the road and drew up at the door of the "Green Dragon" while the voice of the new comer became audible. Seton however, could only catch a few disconnected words, such as "caught in the rain—delicate—shelter—Chiselhurst—closed carriage."

Then the door opened, the landlord, presented himself upon the threshold, and said, in a very pointed manner:

"If you please, sir, a young lady, driving over to Sevenoaks in a light open trap, has been caught in the rain, and her servant wants to know if I can give her a sitting-room while he drives back to Chiselhurst for a closed carriage."

"And this is the only one you have?" rejoined Sexton. "Oh, ask her in by all means. However, I am sorry the room smells so of smoke," he added, as he knocked the ashes from his pipe.

"Don't mention it sir, and thank you very much," replied the landlord.

In another moment the door opened again, and the unexpected intruder entered—a lady tall and graceful, having a pale, Madonna-like face, and golden hair shining like an aureole round a classic head.

Seton's face had grown white to the very lips, and his voice quivered perceptibly as, extending his hand, he said:

"This is a very unexpected meeting."

"Very unexpected," echoed the lady, removing her wet mantle, and sitting down on the leather sofa. The recognition had been mutual, but women, as a general thing, have more self possession than the sterner sex.

"Let me recommend this chair," said Seton, laying his hand upon the one from which he had just risen,

"No, thank you; I prefer sitting away from the fire."

"I am sorry the room should smell so of tobacco," observed Seton, after a pause, "but, you see, I did not expect the pleasure of a visitor."

She smiled a rather forced smile by way of answer, and Seton folded elaborately and put into an envelope a blank sheet of paper.

"The country is very beautiful around here," he observed writing his own name with great care upon the envelope,

"We have only been back from the continent six weeks," she observed, after a pause. "Mamma has taken a house near Chiselhurst. I was driving over to Sevenoaks this morning, and I was caught in the rain, and induced to ask for shelter here."

"And how is Mrs. Clearfield?"

"Mamma is qvite well, thank you." Then after a pause, "Are you stopping here?"

"Hardly," said Seton, with an assumption of gayety in his tone, "but I'll tell you all about it. My friends kindly took it into their heads that I was sticking too closely to work—that I wanted fresh air and exercise—so they bound me over on my word of honor to walk from London to Hastings in a week. I acquiesce in everything now, so, of course, acquiesced in this, and this is my first day of hard labor and imprisonment."

"But you used—" began the lady, then she colored a little and seemed unwilling to finish her sentence; "you used to be so fond of walking."

"But a man changes a good deal in three years," he replied, wearily.

It would weary you, reader, to set down here the dreary commonplaces with which these two tried to beguile the time for over an hour. At last they took refuge in silence, while the wind roared, and the rain lashed the window, the dusk came on prematurely, and Seton looking out on the cheerless prospect, shivered as with the cold. Then the lady rose very quietly, stirred the fire into a blaze, and resumed her seat on the sofa.

"No, you shouldn't really," said Seton not turning round, however, and with a look of pain on his face. It is wonderful what suffering some small, commonplace word or action may cause us. What vistas of possible joys may they not open up to us!

"I suppose the carriage will soon be back," said Alice, presently, and speaking with effort; "our coachman drives very fast."

"Yes; your term of imprisonment will soon be up." rejoined Seton, resting his arms upon the mantelpiece, and examining with critical interest a photograph before him.

"How the time passes!" said Alice in a low voice, as if speaking to herself. Then, with a sudden energy, "I cannot tell when we shall meet again. Before we part, answer me one question. You are looking worn and weary—are you happy?"

Now he stood before her and through the firelight his eyes flashed on her, as he said, in a low, harsh voice:

"From your lips that question is an insult."

"Of which we need not fear the repetition," she rejoined, with cutting formality.

"No, it can't end like this," he went on. "Do you know, ever since you have been here, I have bitten my lips through and through to keep them from speaking of the past? This meeting was not of my seeking, and it seems to me unmanly to take advantage of this opportunity."

"We are sometimes so much mistaken," she said, hurriedly, but her words were hardly audible, and he continued:

"Alice, you have treated me badly. On that day, now three years ago, when I gave you my love, and believed in yours, I was frank with you. I told you how wild and irregular my life had been and how full of faults I was. You reclaimed me—you transformed my days—you made life pure and fair; and then, because some thorn in my love hurt you you threw it all away and left me to perish miserably." She would have interrupted him, but he silenced her with a gesture, and went on: "And now when we meet after three years, you ask me if I am happy. If I loved you once I shall love you forever. Do I look happy?"

"I think there were faults on both sides?" she said quietly.

"Yes, there were," he replied: "but I was reading your last letter only to-day. Oh, how terribly bitter it was!"

"And have you forgotten your answer to that letter!" she said passionately her voice quivering and her breast heaving.

"I don't remember it word for word," he answered quickly; "I know it was written on the impulse of the moment."

"But I have it by heart." Then, very slowly: "You said if your love, in its heart and strength, was a little exciting, mine was cold and tideless; in fact, no love, only a cold, sluggish affection. You almost thought I was right, and that we could not be happy. I am naturally proud," she went on, "but a woman with less pride than I could not have acted differently. Only one course was left to me—to be silent."

"Well—it is all over now; we shall probably never meet again."

"You won't take my friendship, then?"

"No, thank you; you are very generous but I do not want that gift."

He drew himself wearily into a chair and for a time there was silence. Hope is so subtle, so intangible, that we are only aware of its existence when it has ceased to be. Arthur Seton looked upon himself as a man without hope. It seemed to him that his life could not be more desolate than it was, yet who shall say what feeling, of which he was not directly conscious, may have sustained him during the last three years? Now everything seemed gone—there was nothing left for him but death.

Presently a carriage came down the road; carriage lamps flashed through the dusk, and grew stationary opposite the window. Mr. Hunter bustled in and announced that the carriage had come for the young lady, and had done the distance wonderfully quick. Then the door shut, and they were alone together again.

Softly and distinctly Seton heard maspeak his name, "Arthur!" but he did not move. It seemed to him that he would keep back all his love, clinch fast his heart till she was gone, and then die swiftly of the pain.

"Arthur, I am waiting, dear. Won't you come? Are you not going to forgive me?"

He groped his way toward her. She stretched out her hand and drew him to her. Then he bent down; she raised her face, and the hearts and lips so long disunited came together in a long passionate kiss. He knelt down by her, her head sunk upon his shoulders, and for many minutes they remained thus, lost in loves profound peace and mystery And the corks continued to pop, and the wagoners on their way to London trampled in and out of the bar, and good nights were exchanged between customers and landlord, and as Arthur folded Alice's mantle around her, she said shyly:

"You are coming back with me to see mamma, are you not?"

"May I?" he answered joyfully?"

So the bedroom which Mrs. Hunter had been preparing all the afternoon and of which she was not a little proud, remained unoccupied; but the payment was lavish and the day's labor was not regretted.

"Oh! that never-to-be-forgotten ride to Chiselhurst through the wild, windy evening! The rain ceased, and strange voices were abroad in the wind, singing jubilantly over love rerisen and redeeming. The clouds drifted away, an the pure, sweet moonlight quivered over wet fields and trees, and seemed love's benediction.

The reader is left to imagine the arrival home. Arthur was a favorite with Mrs. Clarefield, and in the old days of quarrels would always take his part. When dinner was disposed of Mrs Clarefield pleaded household duties and went to her room. There she sat down before the fire and wept, dear soul, over the happiness of her children. Down stairs these two were very quiet. To them love was a solemn thing, and they were silent lovers. The moments went swiftly on,

Presently Alice said, as she looked up in Arthur's face:

"You are not going to continue your walk to Hastings, this week!"

He answered with a smile:

"But, dear, I have pledged my word of honor to do so."

"I command you break it,"

He did so: but none of his friends brought it as an accusation against him that he for once in his life had broken his word of honor.

Providence or Chance.

A leading merchant, a very nervous man, who had directed his mind more to the sale of dry goods than intellectual cultivation, had a ticket to hear Mr. Emerson given him, which he improved, and sat without moving a muscle till the close, apparently delighted. The lecture was upon "Chance," in which the lecturer took almost if not quite evangelical ground regarding mysterious providences which control human affairs though not, maybe, in the same terms. Chance, however, as an agent, was at a discount, but not an impossibility, and full of the beautiful parts which he had comprehended, the dry-goods man next day was enthusiastic in his explanation. "Well," said he to a friend, "I had a treat, last night, let me tell you." "What was it?" "Oh, Jim Gates gave me a ticket to hear George B. Emerson lecture." "You mean Ralph W. Emerson, don't you!" "Yes, that's what I said. 'T was capital." "What was the subject?" "'Chance,' and the way he handled it was masterly. His illustrations were very fine. For instance, a ship on the sea with her sails blown away, her rudder unshipped, the sea making a clear breach over her, and arriving in port, saved, through it all. It was grand." "Well, did he show how she was saved?" "Yes, he proved to a dot that 'twas either by Providence or chance, but I couldn't exactly make out which."

Hogs require free access to water in the summer time. If they can have a place to bathe or wallow in, it is beneficial to them as it cools and cleanses the skin. Mud is not filth; it is a good disinfectant and healthful. Some times mud baths have been found useful as medicinal treatment for sick people

Perfectly Satisfactory.

The next man was a tall, bow-backed, long-faced chap who had worried through the winter without an overcoat and perhaps without changing his linen.

"No use to ask if this charge of vagrancy is true," remarked his Honor, at Chicago, as he surveyed the prisoner.

"Not a bit of use, Judge; you know it's false," was the ready reply.

"What! Do you deny that you are a vag?"

"Certainly I do!"

"Then what are you?"

"A gentleman and a speculator, sir. If you'll give me a few minutes of your valuable time I'll make the most satisfactory explanations of my present appearance and financial embarrassment."

"Go ahead."

"Well, sir, my name is Rhoderic De Langley. To begin with, no vagrant owned such a name. I am a speculator in grain, bonds, silver stock and other things. When I make a strike I dress like a Prince and live high. When I lose I sleep in the alleys and cut my expenses close. My last speculation was a loss; therefore I am economizing."

"What was your last speculation?"

"Four hundred shares at ten dollars each in an invention to hatch fish by steam. My partner ran away with all the funds and left me flat. In thirty days I shall be on my feet again.'

"How?"

"I am after one hundred shares in Union Pacific. They are down to hardpan and must react. Give me thirty days and I will be in clover again."

"I'll give you sixty," said the Court, after a pause.

"Good! I am a thousand times obliged. Everything is perfectly satisfactory."

"Yes—sixty days in the Work House! April showers will be invigorating the earth when you come out."

"That was a base trick," said the prisoner, as he fell back, and when out of ear shot of the Court he told Bijah that if he lived to serve out his sixty days he would send his Honor an infernal machine and blow him five hundred feet high.

The Poncas at Home.

This tribe of Indians were taken, much against their will, to the Indian Territory, in 1878, a discontented and thoroughly broken down people. Happily their wrongs and misfortunes have been forgotten, the government has paid them for their Dakota homes, and they are now in a comfortable, not to say prosperous condition. Dotted here and there over the beautiful rolling prairie that stretches aloun the Arkansas, the Salt Fork, and the Chicaskia rivers, we see the smoke curling gracefully upward from the cozy little homes of the Poncas, and as approach we discover the Indian transformed into the less romantic farmer trudging along behind his plow. Stopping to speak a word of encouragement he tells you, not so much in words, for but few of the Poncas speak even a little English, as by unmistakable sign-convincing pantomime that "he soon have lots wheat, lots corn." Then with a dignified flourish of the hand he points with pride to his chickens, and sometimes ducks and pigeons, his little herd of cattle often numbering rom fifteen to thirty head, according to the size of his family, his ponies grazing peacefully in the distance, and his neatly-wire-fenced fields, and smiles with a look of complete satisfaction.

We enter a one-roomed dwelling. In one corner on a bed lies a poor little fellow with his broken thigh, the doctor is beside him, and like the brave soldier that he is, he never whimpers although his leg is being set for the second time in its encasement of plaster. The mother is squatted among a confusion of gay quilts and shawls, on the floor near by and is industriously beading a curious little bag to hold matches. Evidently hearing us nearing her door, with a kind of instinct that it is the proper thing to do, she has placed the three chairs of her apartment in a stiff row, and offers us these as we enter. The grandmother does the honors of this hospitable home. She is a tall, magnificent specimen of her race, perhaps about 45 years of age. Her dress is of bright red strouding, and most elaborately trimmed with a complicated kind of patchwork of different colored ribbons, in fact covering the entire front breadth of the skirt; her loose jacket is of a deep blue, and her wide sailor shaped collar is also decorated with the silk ribbons, while around her neck and falling below the waist are strings upon strings of light blue and garnet beads. Her hair is braided carefully, each finger has an ample supply of rings, and the wrists are encircled with coils of brass bangles. She talks to you constantly in the plaintive Southern Ponca language, goes to a bundle wrapped with a gailypainted ox hide and brings forth her treasures. You immediately recognize in these two pictures the likenesses of the Ponca chiefs, taken in all their glory of Indian costume. Again she tells you about her boy at Carlisle and his father who was murdered a few years ago, and this woman is Mrs. Big Snake. You must surely recal the touching story told by Standing Bear of the shooting of his brother, the prominent chief, Big Snake. And in the office of our commissary is pointed out to us the very spot where he fell, and you may see the bullet-hole in the thin wooden wall that marks the fatal shot. Those were exciting times at Ponca. The women brandished their long knives, and Mrs. Big Snake falling in the wagon beside the dead body of her husband, swore vengeance on the agent, and yelled her war whoop in his very face. But to-day she kindly welcomes us to her home, and bids us come again.

At the agency the Indians are busily employed, and some have done themselves great credit as carpenters and blacksmiths. Others make bricks, mix mortar, haul logs and do all the freighting to the agency. When you realize that four years ago these men knew absolutely nothing about this sort of work, the results are truly wonderful. But the chiefs have a great power in the the tribe, and in this enlightened age they use it to advance their people. White Eagle, the head chief of the Poncas, is a true Indian, and a dignified and splendid-looking man. He seemed to be thoroughly conscious of his high position, and always inspires one with a certain awe, although you know him to be literally an "ignorant savage." But this head chief is a bright man, eloquent and effective in council, always politic and always popular. He comes to church on Sunday plainly arrayed in a suit of black broadcloth, but on other occasions he appears arrayed: wrapped in his chieftain's blanket of dark blue, with here and there tufts of gaycolored ribbons, a single eagle feather stands out in bold contrast among his long glossy black hair, his six-shooter thrust into his ornamented belt, his fancy knife-case hung at his side, his beaded leggins and moccasins proclaim him an Indian of the old traditional type. Among the chiefs are White Eagle, Standing Buffalo, Hairy Berr, McDonald and Frank La Flesche and they have great influence among their people.

Shot in Robbing a Grave.

Dr. Lendall, of Syracuse, New York, was found near that place recently lying in an open meadow, with a bullet-wound in the centre of his forehead, penetrating to the brain. The spot where the young man was found is about one hundred feet from the cemetery where the dead are interred from the Onondago County Poorhouse. There were evidence of a terrible struggle near the wounded man and the earth was swimming in blood. Plain foot-tracks led from the body to a new-made grave in the cemetery, which was half-disenterred, showing that Kendall was engaged in the ghoulish task of robbing a grave when surprised by his unknown assailants. Near by were two shovels wrapped together in a piece of old carpet, and a satchel. On his person were a dirk and two revolvers in a belt. In the satchel were a bottle of whisky, a cant-hook, a long piece of rope, a dark-lantern, a bit and stalk and screw-driver and other tools used in grave-robbing. In his pocket was found a card on which was written: "Be shure eight o'clock." Kendall has made in the past a business of furnishing bodies for the medical college in that city, but has had a falling out with that institution and has lately been engaged in supplying some college elsewhere. He is aged about twenty-five years and is of a most aristocratic family. He is at variance with his relatives, as he married about four months ago a beautiful servant girl employed in his father's house. Why he should be engaged in this ghastly occupation is not known, as his practice is quite lucrative. It is believed that he was shot by members of an association called the "Grave Protectors," which has secretly been organized since a recent attempt at a burying ground in that city. Kendall will not recover.

Looks Like Business.

A few months ago a farmer living on the line of Jackson and Fort Wayne road visited the headquarters of the company to urge the necessity of a new passenger station at a certain cross-roads on the line.

"I'm afraid the patronage would not pay the expenses," replied the official.

"I tell you a heap of people would get on and off at them corners," urged the farmer.

"Well, how many of your neighborhood have passed over our road this year?"

"How many? Well, there's the old man Skinner for one. He has been to Jackson twice that I know of. Then there's aunt Deborah Smith, who goes down to Fort Wayne every spring and fall. Then we've got several young men who allers go up to Lansing when there's a circus."

"Any more?" asked the official, as the farmer scratched his head and wriggled around.

"No-o, I don't know as I kin think of any more just now, but if you'll go ahead and put up a station there you can count on a dozen of us sitting around there all the time to make things look like business."

The Story of the Secretary Bird.

There was a time when the Secretary Bird lived on fish, like the other long-legged and crane-like birds, and he was so well satisfied with this fare that he never cared for any other kind of food. One day, a large Secretary Bird was standing in the water, on the edge of a river, busily engaged in fishing. When he caught a fish, he would wade ashore, and there eat it. While he was thus engaged in fishing, a large serpent came winding his way along the river-bank, and, as soon as he perceived the bird, he stopped to see what it was doing. When the Secretary Bird came out of the water to eat the fish, the Snake remarked:

"Friend, it seems to me you would make a pleasanter meal if you would toss your fish upon the bank as fast as you catch them, and then, when you have enough, come out and eat them at your leisure."

"I should like that plan very well," said the Secretary Bird; "but if I should toss a freshly caught fish upon the bank he would flop into the water as soon as I had gone to catch another. Thus I should always be catching fish, and eating none."

"There need be no trouble of that kind to-day," said the Snake; "for, if you will throw the fish on shore, I will see that they do not get into the water again."

"Thank you very kindly," said the Secretary Bird, "If you will do that, it will save time, and I shall soon catch enough fish for a dinner."

"I shall be only too glad to oblige you," said the Serpent.

Thereupon the bird waded into the river, and as soon as he caught a fish he threw it ashore, where the Snake took care that it did not get into the water again. When the Bird thought he had caught enough fish, he came on shore and saw the Snake slowly moving away.

"What is your hurry?" he cried, "Stop and take dinner with me. I have now caught twelve fish, and as I had eaten some before you came, six will be all I shall want. You can have the other six, and we can take a pleasant meal together."

"I am very much obliged to you," said the Snake, still moving away; "but I do not believe that anything could induce me to eat a fish at present. I have no appetite at all for such food." And he glided into the bushes, and was lost to sight.

"He need not be so dainty," said the Secretary Bird to himself; "for fish is very good food, indeed; but since he will not accept my invitation, I shall have all the more dinner for myself. But where are the fish?"

The Secretary Bird looked anxiously about, on the shore and on the grass but he could find no sign of the fish he had caught. At length he came to a little pile of twelve fish-tails lying behind a bush. The Snake did not like fish-tails, and had bitten these off before eating the fish Instantly the truth flashed through the mind of the Secretary Bird.

"That wretched Serpent!" he exclaimed. "He has, indeed, taken good care that my fish shall not escape into the water. He has eaten them, one by one, as fast as I threw them on shore. I never heard of such an infamous trick. But I will be revenged on him. I will find him, no matter where he has hidden himself." So saying, the angry Bird rushed away in pursuit of the crafty acquaintance who had taken care of his fish. Soon he saw a movement among the tall reeds.

"There he is!" he shouted, and he dashed toward the place.

In a moment he had pounced among the reeds, and attacked the Snake with great fury.

"You infamous creature!" he cried. "I will teach you how to deceive a bird of my standing." And in spite of the Snake's efforts to get away, he stamped upon him and pecked him until he had killed him.

"You have cheated me of my dinner," said the angry Bird, "and it would serve you right if I were to make a dinner of you."

So saying,—his appetite whetted by the morning's work,—he began to eat the Snake, and did not stop until he had entirely devoured him.

"Upon the whole," said the Secretary Bird, when he had finished, "I prefer snakes to fish, and I think that for the future I shall make my meal upon these deceitful creatures, who go about playing tricks upon honest folks." After that, this bird gave up eating fish and fed entirely upon snakes. He did not trouble himself to catch the small ones, because it took too many of them to satisfy his hunger, but he preferred the large ones, as one of them was enough for a meal. His wife and children soon learned that snakes were easy to catch and good to eat, and they also gave up eating fish. This Secretary Bird was a very influential member of his tribe, and the new diet soon became quite fashionable; and the descendants of the Secretary Birds of that day have since lived entirely upon large snakes. It may be noticed, also, that the serpents of that part of the country, remembering, perhaps, this old story, have a great distaste for fish.

Life Saving.

The life-saving crews on the New Jersey coast having been relieved from duty, the fact is brought out that only one life was lost on that coast from wrecked vessels from September 1st of last year, to and including Sunday, April 30th, although 178 lives were imperilled. The value of the vessels wrecked and their cargoes was more than half a million dollars, about three-fourths of which were saved through the exertions of the life-saving crews. That is a very creditable record.

LINSEED meal is often found of more feeding value than the seed itself, because in making it into cake twenty-five per cent. of oil is pressed out leaving only eleven to twelve per cent. in the cake. This increases the percentage of albumen about five per cent. making linseed meal contain twentyeight per cent,

FOR TREASURER,

We are authorized to announce J. D. HAMMOND as a candidate for re election to represent Calhoun county in the next Legislature.

The Greenback Independent State Convention, which met at Birmingham on the 6th inst, nominated James L. Sheffield, of Marshall, for Governor.

The Republican party and Malcontents in Alabama promise to give the Democratic party in the State a lively fight. They are holding conventions in all the counties and will endeavor to elect members of the Legislature wherever possible. We do not think they expect to carry the State, but they certainly hope to insert a wedge that will finally split and destroy the Democratic party, and make success, perhaps, certain in some of the Congressional Districts this fall. When the enemy organizes, it is good policy for the Democracy to organize. Let our people keep themselves well together, avoid all dissention and be fully prepared to meet the enemy when he shows his face. We have had quite enough of Radicalism in Alabama to do for a hundred years.

THE HANGING.

The Assassin Strangled. at 12 40. P. M.

In Three of Death Amid Cheers.

WASHINGTON, D. C., June 30, Guiteau was very restless during the most of the latter part of the night, not sleeping more than twenty minutes at a time. Toward morning he fell into sounder sleep from sheer exhaustion. He rose a few minutes after five and breakfasted heartily at 9. 30, When the cook brought his breakfast into the cell Guiteau told him to bring his dinner in at eleven o'clock promptly.

Rev. Dr Hicks, who remained at the jail all night, was called into the prisoner's cell soon after he rose, and held a conversation on religious subjects with him. At eight o'clock Dr. Hicks saw the prisoner again, when he made a request to have a bath, and asked the reverend gentlemen to go out and see the scaffold. Guiteau desired him to arrange with the warden to have the trap sprung as soon after twelve o'clock as was possible. He also expressed considerable anexiety lest some accident should occur and insisted that Dr. Hicks should see that the scaffold and its appurtenances were all in proper and safe position.

After Guiteau disposed of these matters, he read a poem composed by himself which he calls "Simplicity, or Religious Baby Talk." After reading it aloud, he attempted to sing it, but broke down in the effort, which would have appeared quite ridiculous if the occasion had been less solemn. Guiteau talked for some time about his future. He remarked that his heart was "tender." "I don't think," he said "I can go through this ordeal without weeping, not because of any great weakness, for principle in me is strong, but because I am nearer the other world. I hold to the idea that God inspired me" Guiteau subsequently asked that in his books all complimentary remarks about President Arthur and his administration be eliminated. Then he presented to Dr. Hicks the books that have been the companions of his lonely hours. He told Dr. Hicks that he wanted him to offer the first prayer on the scaffold, saying that he (Guiteau) would then read his favorite Scriptual passage the 10th chapter of John, and offer a prayer on his own account. Then he intended he said, "to read his poem, Simplicity." He desired to have the execution so arranged that just as he uttered the last word, the drop should be sprung.

While Dr. Hicks was in the cell at eleven o'clock, Guiteau made some request as to the execution, and having made copies of his "Last Prayer" poem and other writings tore up the originals. He had his boots blacked, and as the Doctor was leaving the cell, his dinner was brought in. Guiteau ate with much relish. When Dr. Hicks came out of the cell he said the prisoner has not the slightest fear. "We have had a pleasant religious talk. He feels now that his preparation is finished and he is ready for the last formality." He commits himself to God with the utmost confidence. I think he will show some emotion, because the nervous strain is so great."

Shortly before twelve o'clock Guiteau seemed to break down completely and burst into tears and sobbed hysterically. After the death warrant was read to the prisoner by the Warden he became much more composed and turning away began to brush his hair with his old appearance of swaggering sangfroid.

At five minutes past twelve o'clock Gen. Crocker read the death warrant to the prisoner in his cell. The only persons present were Gen. Crocker, Deputy Warden Rush, and Rev. Dr. Hicks.

A loud steam whistle was blown at the work house, which was near the jail. This whistle usually blows at 12 o'clock and by it Guiteau was in the habit of reckoning his time. The delay to day was by special arrangement, so that its startling summons might not come before the officers were ready.

Two minutes later the iron gates at the end of the corridor clinked. Then Warden Crocker made his appearance, and a moment later the familiar figure of Guiteau was seen. His face was palid and the muscles about his mouth moved nervously. Other than this there were no signs of faltering. The procession moved quietly to the scaffold and Guiteau ascended twelve somewhat steep steps with as much steadiness as could be expected from a man whose arms were tightly pinioned behind him. At the last step he faltered a moment, but was assisted by two officers who walked one upon either side.

Upon reaching the platform Guiteau was placed immediately behind the drop facing to the front of the scaffold. Capt. Coleman stood upon his right, Mr. Robert Strong upon his left, Mr. Woodward directly behind him. Mr. Jones, took a position on the north side near the upright beam. Gen. Croker, the Warden took his position at the southeast corner of the structure. There was a slight delay, which a crowd of two-hundred and fifty or more spectators were pushing and jostling through the door leading through the rotunda to the corridor, at the lower end of which the gallows was placed. Guiteau meanwhile gazed ubon the crowd, looked up at the beam over his head and quickly made a survey of all the dread paraphernalia.

As soon as the crowd gained access, Gen. Crocker, waved to them to uncover, and all heads were bared. Dr Hicks made an invocation in these words: "Father out of the depths we cry to Thee, Hear Thou our supplication for the sake of Jesus Christ, the Savior, who has made full propriation for us. Behold this Thy servant. We humbly pray that Thou will deliver him at this supreme moment of his life, Let Thy light descend upon him. Liberate his soul from passion. May he appear before You absolved by Thy great mercy from blood guiltiness. Deliver him and us. God have mercy on us. Christ have mercy on us Lamb of God that takest away the sins of the world, have mercy on us. Amen and Amen.

During the prayer Guiteau stood with bowed head. At its conclusion Dr. Hicks opened the Bible, and Guiteau in firm tones said: "I will read a selection from the 10th chapter of Matthew, from the 28th to the 41st verse inclusive." He then read in a clear, strong voice and with good intonation showing little, if any nervousness. Dr. Hicks produced a manuscript, which was prepared by the prisoner this morning, and held it before him, while Guiteau read. While Dr. Hicks was arranging the manuscript, Guiteau exhibited a slight nervousness and moved several times from one foot to the other. He soon recovered his composure, looked over the sea of upturned faces and said: "I am now going to read to you my last dying prayer."

He then read in a loud tone and with a distinct and deliberate emphasis, the following: "My Dying Prayer on the Gallows:—Father now I go to Thee and the Savior. I have finished the work Thou gavest me to do, and I am glad to go to Thee. The world does not yet appreciate my mission, but Thou knowest it. Thou knowest Thou didst inspire Garfiel l's removal, and only good has come from it. This is the best evidence that the inspiration came from Thee, and I have it set forth in my book that all men may read and know Thou Father, didst inspire the act for which I am murdered. This Government and Nation by this act, I know will incur Thy eternal enmity, as did the Jews by killing Thy man, my Savior. The retribution in that case came quick and sharp, and I know Thy Divine law of retribution will strike this Nation and my murderers in the same way. The diabolical spirit of this Nation, its Government and its newspapers, toward me will justify Thee in cursing them, and I know that Thy divine law of retribution is inexorable. I, therefore predict that this Nation will go down in blood, and that my murderers from the Executive to the hangman will go to hell. Thy laws are inexorable. Oh, Thou Supreme Judge, woe unto the men that violate Thy laws. Only weeping and gnashing of teeth awaits them. The American press has a large bill to settle with the righteous Father for their vindictiveness in this matter. Nothing but blood will satisfy them, and now my blood be on them and this Nation and its officials. Arthur, the President, is a coward and an ingrate. His ingratitude to the man that made him and saved his party and land from overthrow has no parallel in history. But Thou Righteous Father, will judge him. Father Thou knowest me, but the world has not known me, and I go to Thee and the Savior without the slightest ill will toward a human being. Farewell ye men of earth."

At several points he half paused and endeavored to impart an increased emphasis to his words by the peculiar facial expression which was often observed during the trial when he was angered at something which was said or done. This was peculiarly noticeable when he alluded to President Arthur, and when he declared that this nation would "go down in blood."

When he had finished reading his prayer he again surveyed the crowd and said with a firm voice: "I am now going to read some verses which are intended to indicate my feelings at the moment of leaving this world. If set to music they would be rendered effective. The idea is that of a child babbling to his papa I wrote it this morning about ten o'clock." He then commenced to chaunt these verses in a sad, doleful style.

"I am going to the Lordy,
I am so glad;
I am going to the Lordy,
I am so glad.
I am going to the Lordy,
Glory hallelujah, glory hallelujah.
I am going to the Lordy.

"I love the Lord with all my soul,
Glory hallelujah, and that is the reason
I am going to the Lord,
Glory hallelujah, glory hallelujah.

(Here Guiteau's voice failed, and he bowed his head and broke into sobs, but he rallied a little and went on with his chant.)

"I saved my party and my land,
Glory hallelujah,
But they have murdered me for it,
And that is the reason
I'm going to the Lordy,
Glory hallelujah, glory hallelujah,
I am going to the Lordy.

(Here again his feelings overcame him, and he leaned his head on the shoulder of Mr Hicks and sobbed pitifully. Still he went on.)

I wonder what I will do when I get to the Lordy.
I guess that I will weep no more, when I get to the Lordy,
Glory hallelujah.

(Here there was another interruption, caused by sobs and emotion which he was unable to repress. He wept bitterly, and then, with quivering lips and mournful tones, he went on to finish his ditty.)

I wonder what I shall see, when I get to the Lordy;
I expect to see most splendid things beyond all earthly conception,
When I am with the Lordy.
Glory hallelujah.

(Raising his voice to the highest pitch that he could command.)

Glory hallelujah! I am with the Lord.

This closed the chant, and then Rev. Mr. Hicks gave to Guiteau his final benediction and farewell, saying: "God, the Father, be with thee, and give the peace forevermore."

The attendants then pinioned his legs, placed the noose over his head, and carefully adjusted it about his neck. Mr. Strong placed the black cap over his head. As he did so Guiteau called out in loud ones: "Glory, glory, glory!"

Instantly the spring was touched. The drop fell at 12:40 p. m, and Guiteau swung in the air. The body turned partly around, but there was not the slightest perceptible movement of the limbs or any evidence of conscious effort to move them.

When the drop fell a yell was sent up by some persons in the jail. This was echoed outside by voices of a thousand or more people, who hurrahed lustily. There was a general onslaught by the populace upon the door which was so powerful that the officers were unable to withstand it. Hundreds of people crowded into the office, and there was a terrible crash at the doors.

For at least forty seconds after the drop fell the body hung motionless, then there was a slight motion of the shoulders and legs, due to muscular contraction. Three minutes after the trap fell the body was lowered to be examined by the physicians. There was a decided action of the heart for fully fourteen minutes, and the pulse fluttered two minutes longer.

When the body had hung with the feet just touching the ground for over half an hour, it was lowered into the coffin which was waiting for it under the scaffold. The physician decided at once that the neck had been broken. When the body was lowered, the black cap was removed and the face exposed. The features were pallid and composed. About the mouth there was considerable moisture.

GUITEAU'S BURIAL.

Laid Beneath the Jail Yard Stone, "Unwept, Unhonored and Unsung."

WASHINTON, D. C., July 1.—The body of Guiteau was buried yesterday afternoon in the northeast corridor of the jail, and so far as is now known, the remains will lie there undisturbed. Under the law the disposition of the bodies of criminals who are executed rests within the discretion of the Warden. In the case of Guiteau, his sister, Mrs. Scoville, was without means, and could not have undertaken his burial expenses, even if permitted to do so. The only other relative who has appeared upon the scene, his brother, John W. Guiteau, was unwilling to assume the risk of taking charge of the remains, believing he would be powerless to prevent body-snatchers from stealing them; therefore, Gen. Crocker resolved to bury the assassin's body within the walls of the jail, where it would be beyond the reach alike of vengeance and speculation.

The northeast corridor, in which Guiteau was buried, is upon the opposite side of the rotunda from the one in which he was hung, and from the window of the cell in which he was confined one can look down upon his grave. The brick flooring was removed this morning, and a grave seven feet deep was dug. At 4 o'clock this morning the coffin containing the body of Charles J. Guiteau was borne from the chapel upon the shoulders of six of the jail prisoners, and, without any service or ceremony whatever, was lowered in his grave and buried from sight. The only persons present were John W. Guiteau, Dr. Hicks, Warden Crocker and son, Mr. Wright, the undertaker Ward, the engineer of the jail, Deputy Warden Russ, Capt. Crocker, and the six prisoners who acted as pall-bearers. The coffin was closed last evening and no one has since been permitted to see the remains. Mrs. Scoville, accompanied by Miss Chevelier, arrived at the jail shortly before 4 o'clock and importuned the warden to be allowed to see the remains and witness their burial. Gen. Crocker, however, remained firm in his determination not to accede to her request, and after a brief stay she returned to the city, leaving a number of flower pieces which she had brought with her, and which she expected to place upon the grave. As the body was being taken down the steps leading from the chapel to the centre rotunda of the building, the mourners, or rather the witnesses, stood near the door leading to the northeast rotunda, and as it was taken down the flight of steps leading from the rotunda to the brick floor of the corridor, they silently filed in behind the convict pall-bearers. Arrived at the grave the little procession halted. Warden Crocker looked inquiringly, first towards Dr. Hicks and then to John Guiteau. "All right," said the latter, with the same imperturbable composure he has exhibited all through the ordeal of the past three days. After the earth had been replaced and the top of the grave leveled off, John W. Guiteau stepped forward and placed at its head a crown of white immortelles. Not a word was spoken, not a tear was shed; an outcast from human sympathy had found an unwept sepulchre in an unmarked grave.

Cash and "Kids"

A letter to the Boston Journal from Moretown, Vt. the residence of the prolific Harriman family reports that James Harriman, whose wife gave birth to four children, received, yesterday, a notice that he has been granted a pension with arrears of $120. The pension is seems, was granted on the day of the children's birth. The new comers, who are now ten days old, are all living and well. Mrs. Harriman, is only thirty years old. Sixteen months ago she produced twins, so that now she has six little ones to take care of. Her grandmother had sixteen children and her mother had also a large family. This private family affair of Mr. Harriman's has created a great excitement in this community, and persons came many miles to view the "litter" of children. Enterprising showmen have already proposed to place the mother and children on exhibition, but the father declined to entertain the offer.

PERRY DAVIS'
VEGETABLE
PAIN KILLER

A Never-Failing Cure for Burns, Scalds, Bruises, Cuts, Sores, etc.

After forty years of trial, PERRY DAVIS' PAIN KILLER stands unrivaled. It is safe! It acts immediately! It never fails!

Editor of the St. John (N. B.) News, says: In flesh wounds, aches, pains, sores, etc., it is the most effectual remedy we know of. No family should be without a bottle of it for a single hour.

From the Cincinnati Dispatch: We have seen its magic effects, and know it to be a good article.

From I. S. Potter, U. S. Consul at Crefeld, Rhenish Prussia: After long years of use, I am satisfied it is positively efficient as a healing remedy for wounds, bruises, and sprains.

W. W. Sharper, Valdosta, Ga., says: It is a panacea for all bruises and burns.

From R. W. Adams, Saco, Me.: It gave me immediate relief.

R. Lewis says: In forty years' use it never has failed me.

W. W. Lum, Nicholville, N. Y., says: I use your PAIN KILLER frequently. It relieves pain and soreness, and heals wounds like magic.

J. W. Dee says: For scalds and burns it has no equal.

PERRY DAVIS' PAIN KILLER is not a new untried remedy. For forty years it has been in constant use; and those who have used it the longest are its best friends.

Its success is entirely because of its merit. Every family should have a bottle ready for use. Much pain and heavy doctors' bills may often be saved by prompt application of the PAIN KILLER. Unlike most medicines, it is perfectly safe even in the hands of a child. Try it once thoroughly, and it will prove its value. Your druggist has it at 25c., 50c., and $1.00 per bottle. PERRY DAVIS & SON, Proprietors, Providence, R. I.

Public Speaking at Jacksonville

Gen. E. A. O'Neal, Democratic candidate for Governer, and Hon. Isaac H. Kent, Democratic candidate for Treasurer, will speak at Jacksonville, Saturday, July 15th. Everybody, (the ladies especially) are invited to attend.

It was so cold here on the night of the 4th of July that blankets were brought in requisition on the beds and fires were necessary on the morning of the 5th.

Preaching at the Methodist church tomorrow at 11 o'clock—Rev. V. O. Hawkins.

Attention is directed to he advertisement of Mr. W. H. Cooper, Agent for the "Gullett Improved Light Draft Cotton Gin," to be found in another column.

General rains visited this section July 4th and the crop prospect is more flattering than ever. The papers for years have urged the planting of "more corn." This year our farmers have heeded the call and the Lord of the harvest is blessing the act.

There is a split in the Republican party of Calhoun. Saturday another convention was held and a contesting delegation elected to attend the Republican State convention, July 6, in Montgomery.

Rev. V. O. Hawkins will preach at the Presbyterian church, near Mr. W. J. Scott's residence, next Sunday evening, at four o'clock, on the subject of Sunday schools Come out and hear him.

The Fourth

On the fourth of July a large crowd assembled at the Court House in the celebration of the birth of our great Republic. After repeated calls for various persons, Mr. Woodward finally took the stand, and gave a very excellent and highly eloquent extemporaneous oration. His eloquence mingled with the thunder and storm, gave us a vivid and pathetic picture of the struggles of the fathers in formulating and maintaining the great fundamental principles of the only true civil liberty as laid down in the first great written Constitution of mankind, and of the lasting triumph of these immortal principles of truth, justice and right.

We are pleased to announce the arrival of Miss Mamie E. Montgomery of the LaGrange Female College faculty. Below we give clippings from Georgia papers which will show in what esteem Miss Montgomery is held by those who know her.

She is the daughter of perhaps the most successful educator of females that the South ever know—Col. J. T. Montgomery, founder of the LaGrange Female College; afterwards President of Centenary Institute, Summerfield Ala., and the Marshall Female College, in Texas. Miss M. is thus an hereditary teacher—besides bringing several years' experience as such. She will reside and teach here, perhaps—and we are congratulated by others on our acquisition. Her fame as an elocutionist is known to many of our people, as she has read before our public in the recent past.

Lagrange Reporter: We regret to learn that the accomplished Miss Montgomery has severed her connection with the LaGrange Female College, and that she will leave us for Jacksonville, Ala., where her mother and brother reside, and where she will engage in teaching. The citizens of that place may well congratulate themselves upon such an acquisition.

College Casket: Miss Montgomery, the teacher of our Primary Department, is a daughter of Col. J. F. Montgomery, the founder of our College. She claims as her earliest home, the old "college hill," upon which we have spent so many happy hours. Her education was acquired under the direction of her distinguished father. She began her collegiate life as a primary, in the very place where she now so faithfully guides the feet of other little ones in their first steps upon the rough road of learning. She, however, followed her father to his distant Texas work where she graduated, a member of his last senior class. It has been said that a teacher's success may be judged by the love her pupils bear her. If this is true, her "little folks" speak greater praise than we can possibly express.

Mr. L. R. McMurtrie has now introduced his window catch into every part of Calhoun county with signal success. He requests us to express his sincere gratitude to the people of the entire county for their liberal patronage and refined hospitality. He says:

"When death's dark stream I ferry o'er,"
A time that soon will come,
In Heaven itself I'll ask no more
Than just a Calhoun welcome.

We take pleasure in commending Mr. McMurtrie to the public as a christian gentleman worthy of confidence, and his window catch as the most popular in the market.

We expected this week a communication from a patron as to the examination exercises at Calhoun College, but were disappointed. Suffice it to say, the exercises were most interesting, and highly satisfactory to patrons of the school.

The following lines were handed me by a little pupil, nine years of age, (Willie W.) They were suggested by a few remarks I made to the school on Mr. Longfellow's first poem. I hand it to the editor in the same language in which it was handed to me. G. B. R.

Rhymes on Geraniums.

Geraniums so sweet and so tall,
Geraniums so lovely and small;
And when your sweet breath floats out in the air,
I look on you with tenderest care;
For I think on you in my innocent glee,
How dear you are to me
Geraniums—sweet Geraniums.

O how lovely you are,
You look like a beautiful star;
And when I look—I look with pride on you,
Pink, white and crimson hue.
I wonder if you grew on the Mediterranean,
Geraneums, sweet Geraniums.

And each morning when I awake from sleep,
I go out to see the Geranium so sweet;
And each one is sparkling with pearly dew,
Catching the morning sun's golden hue;
And O how I love you nobody knows,
Geraniums, Geraniums as sweet, as sweet as a rose.

I've got one little Geranium all to myself.
And I like it better than any one else
My little Geranium is going to bloom,
I hope its bloom will be big as a spoon.
Now I must study, good by sweet flow'r,
I'll call to see you some play hour.

PUBLIC SPEAKING.

I shall attend the various precincts at the times specified, for the purpose addressing the people. I most earnestly solicit the voters to meet with me; and the ladies are most cordially invited to come out, for their interest in our State offairs are equal with ours.

MARTINS ROADS LOCALS.

W. D. Johnson is happy—it's a boy.

Rev. T. R. Trotter is very happy—two girls this time.

Corn crops are looking well in this vicinity. We think that crops have never been cultivated as well in this portion of the county as they have been this year. Many farmers are about done laying by their crops. We have had good seasons during the last few days, and the prospect is good for an abundant supply of bread stuff for another year; then we may look for lagre crops of cotton again and bread at starvation credit prices.

There is not much said about politics in this settlement. But few are in favor of the stock law spoken of but I believe all are in favor of a road law; and nine tenths are against any more prohibition unless a general prohibition law is passed for the State.

A protracted meeting commences at Cane Creek Baptist church the 2nd Saturday in July. Everybody is invited to attend; also, at Morrisville Methodist church on the 4th Sunday in July, to which distant brethren are invited to attend.

Mr. James Head, an old citizen of the county died the 30th of June. He first had a stroke of paralysis, then was taken with dropsy, which caused his decease.

Miss Carry Morris is progressing finely with her school at Cane Creek school house. She is a great public benefactor to the settlement in which she lives

CROSS PLAINS LOCALS.

MARRIED,—on the evening of the 25th inst. at the Methodist church in this place, by the Rev. P. H. Brewster, Mr. A. N. McBride to Miss Josephine Ferguson.—Attendants: Dr. W. W Little and Miss Dixie Caller; Mr. J. K. Dailey and Miss Hattie Dunn Mr. J. F. Jenkins and Miss Mamie Ferguson; Mr. R. F. Hughes and Miss Sallie Brewster; Mr. W. B. Long and Miss Katie Kiernan, Mr. W. C. Savage and Miss Annie Kiernan; Mr. David Cowden, and Miss Sallie Teague; Mr. R. E. Lewis and Miss Mollie Kiernan. The church was brilliantly lighted and handsomely decorated; and while the lovely bride and handsome bridegroom stood there before the alter, under interwining wreathes of beautiful flowers, surrounded by fair women and brave men, the whole formed a scene captivating in the extreme. And there before that sacred alter, in presence of many admiring friends, the handsome couple plighted their vows, promising to love, cherish and keep "until death doth them part." After the ceremony and congratulations, the bridal party repaired, to the residence of the brides parents where an elegant and sumptuous repast awaited them May life grow happier for them every day, is the wish of your humble reporter.

The third quarterly conference of Cross Plains circuit was held in the Methodist church at this place last Saturday and Sabbath. The presiding Elder, Rev. Mr. Morris, preacted two very able and interesting sermons, greatly edifying his large audiences.

The Cross Plains Brass Band resurrected last Saturday, and treated our citizens to some very good music. We hope the boys will keep up their organization.

Mr. D. D. Loffland, has lately associated with him in the hotel business at this place. Mr. Robert Gibbony of Bristol, Tenn, who has become a resident of our town. These gentlemen are sparing neither pains or expense in fitting up their house, and are exerting themselves to make it a nice, pleasant and good place for travelers to stop. They have made several important improvements of late, and are now ready to treat everybody first class. We wish them success.

We understand that some of our farmers around here, are needing rain badly. We hope they will get plenty this week.

OCCASIONAL.

ALEXANDRIA LOCALS.

"Oh, Ignorance:
Thou art fallen man's best friend
With thee he speeds along his way"

Is this poetry? If not it carries with it the gist of the idea I wish to use. With this assurance I lauch this local from the suburbs of Alexandria Valley, feeling that I am clad with the aforesaid impenetrable armor. "Good wine needs no bush' therefore I indulge myself with the fancy that to write from so prosperous a community needs only my figure head, Alexandria Locals.

The valley is turning with bright flourishing prospects for a beautiful crop of corn and cotton. There has been an unusually large wheat and oat harvest and the people are luxuriating in soft peaches and Jersy cream. There is in expectation, in the near future, a huge supper, ball, concert, &c, given by the Earnest Workers or Mite Gatherers. This may not be exact names but suffice it to say, it is an organization whose objective aim, is that of charity. You will be duly informed of the occasion and every body expected to attend. Since the return of our young ladies from Nashville, Rome, and Oxford the good people are thoroughly alive to the enjoyment of their bright happy faces, each trying to outvie the other in kindly deeds to their home welcoming. Mrs. "Fate" Green gave a unique sociable last week, upon which occasion fourteen of our valley's fair ones graced her parlors. All went well as a marriage feast and none spoke but in terms of praise and exclamations of what a jolly time: Others will follow.

On the evening of the 23rd of June, your corespondent, in company with the genial W. H. Cooper, started to attend the public installation of the Masonic Lodges of Eastaboga and Blue Eye. Passing down the valley we beheld the "hard fisted yeomanry" cheerfully and indoustriously engaged in their farms and from appearances they will be amply rewarded.

Coming to Morrisville we drew rain for the night at the house of our deservedly popular citizen E. G. Morris. At the gate we were cordialy taken by the hands by Mess. Elbert and Louis Morris and rushed right in. Very soon we were summoned to supper where we were kindly greeted with the cheerful smiles of our hostess. After regaling the inner man, we repared to the parlor and enjoyed for a brief while, the refined wit and delightful music, of Misses Carrie and Nelly. We found the old gentlemen absent in the interest of his manufacturing establishment though his sons Mess. Elbert and Louis, are strictly business men. Besides superintending their plantation and various machinery, they have in course of erection, and nearly completed, a foundry for the manufacture of their celebrated turbine water wheel. They are already thronged with orders. Also they are entertaining a proposition from a northern firm, to to place in operation, a cotton factory of two thousand spindles.

After enjoying their welcome hospitality for the night we recommenced our journey with the addition of Mess. Elbert and Louis Morris. We arrived on the grounds at ten o'clock where, some four hundred of Talladegas people had gathered to witness the installation. The first thing that greeted our ears, were, "ice cold lemonade, walk right up". We did and partook—but didn't spike. Every thing went off nicely. Maj Cattlebury, of the Talladega bar addressed the crowd, giving the history of masonry, its moral and religious training, its charity &c,

The audience was well pleased and enthused with the speech. The tables groaned under the weight of the fat pigs, kids, lambs, turkeys, chickens and all the paraphernalia that goes to make up a good dinner. Here I'll leave us, knowing that we are better men, that we have gazed upon Talladegas fair women, that we have looked into their dark liquid eyes, that we have seen their white brows beautified with the cutest of cute bangs. In short I can't say it, neither will I tell tales, but Bill Cooper has unconditionally surrendered to a pair of black eyes,

DOGBERRY.

MRS. SUSAN A NUNNELLY.

Died in Jacksonville, Ala., April 29, 1882, after a long and painful illness, Mrs Susan A. Nunnelly, wife of our esteemed citizen, Mr. Joseph Nunnelly. Mrs. Nunnelly was born in Talladega county, Feby 14, 1831, moved to Jacksonville when quite young, where she lived the remainder of her life, honored and loved by all who knew her. She was married to Mr. Joseph Nunnelly January 8, 1860; and was to him a helpmeet in deed. She recognized home as woman's sphere, and the duties devolving upon her in that sphere, as the great mission of a wife. Throughout her entire life she cultivated those God like virtues and christian graces which characterized her here and now beautify her spirit in eternity. In her family and society she filled a place only filled by the most loving, tender and affectionate companion and friend.

For more than twenty years she was a consistent member of the Baptist church and up to the time of her death was an earnest, devout, zealous christian Her religion was of that higher, purer character that impressed those around her in every day life. It was in the hours of greatest affliction that the star of her hope of eternal happiness shone brightest. She bowed submissively beneath the rod of affliction and was content to know that the rod was in the hand of her Father, to whom she had unreservedly committed herself, and from whom she daily received strength sufficient to bear her up. There was a beauty in her christian character during her protracted illness none could fail to see—the patience with which she bore her trials and the childlike faith and confidence she had in her Saviour. Her manner in the trying hour of death was alike beautiful and impressive. She did not look upon death as an ordeal, but simply as a passage from a world of care to one of happiness and peace. When asked if she could trust her Saviour in the hour of death, she replied, "I have placed my trust in the Lord a long time and now I am only waiting." However painful the separation, it is indeed gratifying to have such assurance of her happier state beyond the grave

To her relatives and many friends we extend our heartfelt sympathy, trusting that when the summons comes to them they may be as well prepared to meet it; and as peacefully "fall asleep in Jesus."

TATE SPRINGS.

Health and Pleasure for Alabamians.

Already fourteen States are represented by the guests in attendance at Tate Springs, East Tennessee. A good company has been there all winter and has rapidly increased since the 1st of March The demand for the water has doubled in the past six months, and is being shipped now to all points of the nation at the rate of 2,000 bbls per annum. We have seen no natural mineral water so strongly endorsed as a remedial agent for dyspepsia and diseases of the liver, stomach, bowels and kidneys. Our doctors prescribe it and hundreds in Alabama are daily drinking the water at home and can attest its power over disease. When the summer travel sets in, more of our Alabama "summer resorters" will be found at Tate Springs than at any other resort outside of the State. Dr. J. S. Weatherly of Montgomery, is resident physician. The new building is all complete and furnished Send for for large 40 page pamphlet containing fuh information on all points. Messrs. TESTIMONIALS.

ALEXANDRIA, ALA, Dec. 15, 1880.

Messrs Berrys & Co., Rome, Ga.,

DEAR SIRS: In reply to your enquiry, I will say the sixty saw Light Draft Gullett Gin bought of you last fall gives perfect satisfaction. I have been ginning seventeen years, and I have yet to see a Gin that makes as good a sample from dirty cotton as the Gullett. The feeder works perfectly in every respect. I would not have a gin without one

W. PHIL COOPER

GRIFFIN, GA., March 1, 1879.

We, the undersigned are using the Gullett Improved Light Draft Cotton Gin. The Gin is of superior workmanship. For fast ginning, safety in running, and light draft, (to do the same work,) we think it has no equal; but the most important feature is the attachment for opening and improving the sample. The best cotton is improved by it so as to bring from ½ to ¾ cent, and stained and dirty cotton from ¾ to 1 cent per pound more in market than other Gins.

ROME, GA., March 7th, 1881.

We, the undersigned buyers and shippers of cotton in Rome, Georgia, take pleasure in recommending the new Improved Light Draft Gullett Gin as the best Gin known to us, for the reason that it turns out smoother and cleaner cotton with less nap, and consequently is worth more money

AGRICULTURE.

LAW FOR FARMERS:—CATTLE IN THE HIGHWAY.—Mr. H. A. Haigh, LL. B., of Detroit, gives a resume of the laws on the above subject, in the American Agriculturist for June, from which we extract the following:

It is a general doctrine of law in this country that the land in the highway belongs to the owners of land lying along each side. With a few exceptions the American farm extends to the middle of the road, and the public has only the right to pass and repass there in an orderly manner, and the right to keep the way in repair. Every other use of the highway which does not interfere with this public right, belongs to the farmer owning the adjacent land. He owns the soil, grass, trees, stones, and gravel, and everything else upon the surface or under it, and may use them all in any way that does not affect the public right of passage; and the law will protect his ownership in them just as much as though they were inside his fence. No other person has any more right to pasture his stock there than in inclosed lands; nor can he hitch his horse to a tree there without being liable for the trespass, especially if the horse should gnaw the tree or do other damage; he can, in fact, only pass orderly along.

As to road fences, the laws do not, with the possible exception of those of New York above noted, impose any obligation; and the farmer may, if he chooses; remove such fences, without impairing his right of action against the owners of any domestic animals that enter and do damage by that means.

If a person lets his cattle go in the highway, he is liable for the trespass they commit by simply being there unlawfully; for the grass they consume, for the injury they occasion to the sod or by barking the trees, and for any other damage they may do. If, while there, they hook, or kick, or bite any per on lawfully using the way, he would be liable for the injury. A man once turned his horse into a public place where children were playing, one of whom began switching the horse, which turned and kicked and killed the child. He was convicted of manslaughter.

Notwithstanding the fact that the farmer owns the land of the road, he cannot use it himself for any purpose which at all interferes with the public rights there. He can not put his wood piles, wagons, or pig pens there; and if he does, and the traveler runs into them in the night and is injured, he would not only be liable for the private damages sustained—(Linsley vs Bushnell, 15 Conn. 225) but he may be indicted for obstructing a public way.

KILLING WEEDS WITH VITRIOL.—We have here found the use of drops of sulphuric acid (oil of vitriol) an easy, neat and entirely effective way of destroying scattering weeds in the grass of a small lawn or front yard. It is particularly convenient for extirpating such ill-looking interlopers as plantain, etc. To cut these out with a knife or a spud involves for each one several motions and serious labor; and even this is not effectual unless every root is completely severed. Even if done effectively there is left either a hole or a loose dead weed. But, having a spoonful of vitriol in a small open-mouthed bottle, fastened on the end of a two foot handle, we have only to dip the bruised end of a small rod into it and touch the heart of a weed, or four successively before dipping again, and they are done for. We have only to see if there are any more left. Of course where weeds are to be killed by wholesale in fallow ground the rake, or hoe or harrow is the thing to use. And in walking over meadows in the spring, the spud (a light thin chisel about three inches wide with a handle five or seven feet long) is an excellent instrument to have in hand. It serves in turn as a staff and a weeder. Any intruding thistles, docks, dandelions, or the like, can be drawn or cut with ease. In the garden it is a capital thing. Its long handle and ease of operation make it very handy to push along between rows, shearing off the crust and the coming weeds without one's going off the path. For this use its blade should be bent up a little so as to be nearly horizontal when the end of the handle is elbow high. It suits feeble persons who wish to do some weeding, but who can neither stoop, or lift or strike without pain.

KEEPING WHEAT AND OTHER GRAIN.—Difference of climate has a good deal to do with thrashing and selling grain at harvest or immediately after. In England more than half the grain of all varieties remains in the straw unthrashed till the next spring. Oats are never put in barns at harvest; they are stacked, very neatly and carefully thatched by a professional laboring thatcher. Wheat, barley, beans and peas also are chiefly put into ricks and thatched, remaining till, stack by stack, they are required to be thrashed for the straw quite as much as for the grain, excepting where capital is short.

A NOVEL HOUSE PLANT.—The common cranberry is a most attractive plant when properly cultivated in pots, and can endure a great deal of neglect which would be fatal to other plants. It only needs to be kept cool and moist. A compost of muck and sand is the proper material for potting it in. Although usually regarded as aquatic in its nature, it will not do to have the soil saturated with water. What it requires, is that water shall be within reach of its roots, and that the soil shall be one through which water can rise readily by capillary attraction.

FEEDING LITTLE PIGS.—Young pigs should be fed a little at a time and often—this is the secret of rapid growth. If allowed all they will eat, they will gorge themselves and bring on colic or become pot-bellied and stunted, when if the feed was divided into two or three feedings, they would digest it without derangement of the stomach, and grow well.

VALUE OF SURFACE SOIL.—It was not known until discovered by Way, and confirmed by Liebig and others, that a few inches in depth of surface soil has the power to fix or retain all, or nearly all, the food of plants which our manure contains, such as potash, phosphate of lime and ammonia, thus preventing its passage into the poor subsoil.

IN moist charcoal seeds will sprout with remarkable quickness and certainty, but after they have sprouted they do not continue to grow well in charcoal alone. Drilled in with the seed charcoal powder is said greatly to promote the growth of wheat.

THE best time to top-dress grass land is in August or September, before the fall rains occur and after the burning heat of summer is past; if then applied the rains soak it and carry the fertilizing properties directly to the grass roots, where they are needed.

IT is said by a farmer who has tried the experiment so often as to be sure of his ground that buttermilk poured over the back of a scurvy pig will entirely and speedily remove the scurf. The remedy is simple. Almost every farmer can boast of one or more scurvy pigs, and if buttermilk will cure it, it should not be spared.

DOMESTIC.

CODFISH A LA MAITRE D'HOTEL.—Buy as much cod in thick slices as you require, two slices being sufficient for four persons; boil it, allowing a quarter of an hour for each pound, and when the flesh will separate easily from the bone drain it, remove the skin, and put it into a stew pan, with a quarter of a pound of butter, a little chopped shalot and parsley, pepper and salt to taste, and a quarter of a teaspoonful of grated nutmeg, (if the flavor is liked, if not omit it); shake the stew pan gently till the butter is melted, but not until it is oily; then, as the ingredients mix well together, add the lemon juice and serve very hot; very small, round potatoes, now that new ones are unobtainable, can be procured by cutting them with the vegetable scoop out of larger ones; should be served with the fish; a little parsley, minced very fine and sprinkled over them is an improvement.

CELERY SOUP.—This soup can be made with or without stock, but it is better with it. If made with stock, take nine heads of celery and cut them up into small pieces; have ready two quarts of boiling water, into which throw the celery, a teaspoonful of salt, one lump of sugar, and a little nutmeg; let it boil until the celery is perfectly tender; then pass it through a sieve; add three-quarters of a pint of stock, and let it simmer for half an hour; to make it richer add half a pint of cream and good milk; let it come to a boiling point, and serve immediately with fried bread. The best stock for such white soup is made by boiling a knuckle of veal until the meat is all in shreds, adding lemon peel and straining it for use.

BROWN GRAVY.—Take two pounds of shin of beef, one-quarter pound of lean ham, one onion, two pints of water, salt and whole pepper to taste, one blade of mace, a pinch of savory herbs, half of a large carrot, and half a head of celery, cut the beef and ham into small pieces, and slice the vegetables; have a jar which would hold two pints of water and arrange therein the ham, meat, vegetables and seasoning alternately, filling up with two pints of water; close the jar tightly, so that no steam can escape; place it in the oven to remain six or eight hours. At the expiration of that time strain the gravy, and when cold remove every particle of fat; it may be flavored with wine, catsup, or any sauce preferred.

A VERY GOOD APPLE PIE.—Take a large coffeecupful of light bread dough, work in it a piece of butter the size of an egg, fill a deep dish with apples sliced thin, put a little water on them, roll out the crust just to cover the dish, and bake until the apples are perfectly soft; then with a knife lift the crust off, lay it upside down on a plate a little larger than the crust; mash the apples with the back of a spoon in the dish they were baked in, put a piece of butter in them as large as a nutmeg, sugar to your taste, stir well together, spread them on the crust, grate nutmeg over the top, and you have a nice pie. Better if eaten with cream.

LIGHT TEA BISCUIT. Two quarts of sifted flour, one pint of sweet milk, in which melt one quarter of a pound of sweet butter, one teaspoonful of salt in the milk, one teacup of fresh yeast, well shaken diligently with a fork. Let the milk, etc., be just blood warm, no more; then knead as bread. Cut it across, through with a knife. Let it rise six or seven hours, as it may require. Take from the pan, knead it well, cut in small cakes, and put to rise in a pan an hour before baking. This recipe, with additional sugar and suitable spices, makes excellent family doughnuts.

BOILED FROSTING.—If a little cream of tartar is mixed with the sugar the frosting will harden at once. Make the frosting as follows: Boil two and one half cups of sugar with two-thirds of a cup of water until it will hang in strings from the spoon, add the whites of three eggs beaten to a froth, stir it until it is quite smooth and add the juice of one lemon. This will make enough to put between the layers of a good sized cake and frost the top and sides. One cup of sugar and one egg is enough for the top sides of a good sized cake.

A NICE SUPPER.—A good supper is made of bacon and potatoes in this way. Thin slices of bacon are fried to a delicate brown and set away in a plate in the oven. Cold boiled potatoes are cut in slices and fried crisp in the fat; thin slices of onions are added five minutes before they are done. Serve these with tart apples stewed until soft but not broken; put these in a pan; put in water and sugar to make a syrup and put them in the oven to brown.

STEWED CARROTS.—Scrape the carrots and cut them in half; Then cut them up into small strips about an inch in length, place them in a stew pan, with salt and enough water to cover them, and let them simmer till quite tender; then drain them, replace them in the pan, with two ounces of butter, dredge them well with flour, add enough water to moisten thoroughly, (some persons prefer stock), let them come to the boil and serve very hot.

MINCE PIES.—The best of mince meat is made as follows: Four pounds of round of beef; two pounds of suet; eight pounds of apples; four pounds of sugar; two pounds of raisins; two ounces of cinnamon; one of allspice; one nutmeg; two quarts of boiled cider; one pint of brandy; half a pint of molasses; half a cup of salt. Chop and mix all fine and put down in a jar to ripen.

NEW TOWELS.—When new towels are to be washed first, overcast the fringed edge, shake the fringe out well before they are hung up to dry, or the fringe may be whipped out over the back of a chair. This is better than combing and does not wear out the fringe.

BROWN BETTIE.—This is a simple and easily made pudding. Put alternate layers of grated bread crumbs and chopped apples in a pudding dish; season each layer with sugar, cinnamon, and a little butter. For a dish holding 3 pints, use three cupfuls of hot water. Bake an hour and a half and make the top brown. Serve with sweet cream.

A VENISON ROAST.—A loin of venison is rolled up with a head of celery and some sweet herbs inside and skewered and tied up well. Some water is put in the dripping pan, and on the top of the roast some thin slices of salt pork are laid. Roast for two hours, baste often and turn once. Thus cooked venison is juicy and never dry. Serve with apple sauce or jelly.

GOLD CAKE.—A very satisfactory foundation for a chocolate cake is made as follows: Half a pound of sugar; four ounces of butter; half a pound of flour; the yolks of five eggs; and one teaspoonful of baking powder are well beaten together and flavored with vanilla.

HUMOROUS.

"I COME over to see about your boy," said a neighbor last evening. "He's very troublesome about my house. He has been throwing rotten apples into my front yard and calling my wife Old Molly Grubs."

"And I was going over to see you about your boy," was the rejoinder. "He chalked my woodshed all over with a picture of my wife driving me out of the back door with a kettle of water in one hand and a broom in the other."

"Is that so? Then I go in for civil service reform within our own families." The boys never knew what they were "licked" for that night.

Uncle Sam's Men.

Uncle Sam's letter-carriers are a hard working set of men, and are liable to contract rheumatism because of the constant exposure to which they are subjected. Calling at the post-office the reporter had a pleasant conversation with Mr. J. H. Mattern, one of the most popular and clever letter-carriers in Indianapolis. Mr. Mattern said that, while in the army during the civil war, he sprained one of his ankles, which was always worse in the spring during the period of the rapid changes in the weather. He did not find much relief from the several remedies he applied. But two years ago he hit upon St. Jacob's Oil, and experienced wonderful relief from its use. Several applications of the Great German Remedy relieved him entirely. The reporter talked with others among the letter carriers and found that the great German Remedy was popular in the post-office. They use it for sore feet, rheumatism, etc., and praise it highly.—Indianapolis (Ind.) News.

"OUR little Bobby" of four years had been lectured by his aunt on the evil of disobedience to parents, and the example was showed him of a boy who disobeyed his mother and went to the river and got drowned.

"What did they do with him?" asked Bobby after a moment's reflection.

"Carried him home," replied the aunt, with due solemnity.

After turning the matter over in his mind—profitably, it was hoped—he looked up and closed the conversation by asking, "Why didn't they chuck him in again?"

We see in the New York Spirit of the Times mention of the cure of Mr. George Drake, 46 Fifth street, Indianapolis, Ind., of a severe case of water rheumatism, by the use of St Jacob's Oil.—Cincinnati Enquirer.

HE had been courting her for three years, and the other evening when he asked her to sing something, she innocently warbled: "Why don't the men propose, mamma?" Mamma said the conundrum was a very timely one, and perhaps Mr. Fitzslow could answer it. Fitz said he was never very good at guessing conundrums, and besides he didn't feel very well, and it looked like rain, and some other time— He didn't stay longer than that.

"Yes, Mr. Grabdower, I did."

"And a large estate in Leicestershire?"

"Certainly; besides another in Yorkshire, Mr. Grabdower."

"And yet, Miss Mary, you can doubt my love for you!"

"YES," he said to his confidential friend, "I am engaged to her, and I suppose I ought to be very happy; but somehow I am worried about a possible former attachment of her. There's that infernal blackguard, Jones, who—"

"Why, you stupid fellow she hates him like poison."

"Yes, yes, I know—that's what troubles me. She hates him too bitterly not to have loved him once."

IT is with feelings akin to pain that we observe that our best young men are clothing themselves in trousers that fit them too quick, and hats that are built on the model of a schooner yacht. This gives them the appearance of animated washbowls trying to walk on stilts.

PAT was sauntering along the street when he came upon a workman cutting down a decayed telegraph pole. Surveying the operation with a look of mingled surprise and regret, he muttered: "Begorra, it's too bad. If it kapes on this way there'll be no forrist trees left in the country."

VEGETINE.—This preparation is scientifically and chemically combined, and so strongly concentrated from roots, herbs and barks, that its good effects are realized immediately after commencing to take it.

AN extreme agony is for a young lady to add to her toilet a large sunflower at her belt. The occult significance of this is, "I always turn toward the son—of some rich man." Isn't there a touch of the intense about this?

A LADY put her watch under her pillow, the other night, but couldn't keep it there because it disturbed her sleep. And there, all the time, was her bed ticking right under her, and she never thought of that at all.

"Beaver hats, my child—beaver hats."

As the use of electricity becomes more and more general, the great importance of some method of storing the current for future use becomes more widely appreciated. Since the announcement of Faure's electrical accumulator some months ago, this subject has been much studied, and several storage batteries have been produced by eminent electricians. The most promising apparatus of this kind is said to be one just described by Mr. Henry Sutton, of Australia, to the British Royal Society. It appears, from information now at hand, that Mr. Sutton obtained the best results with a negative electrode of copper and a positive of amalgamated lead—that is, lead coated with mercury. These two elements are placed in a solution of sulphate of copper. When a current of electricity is passed through this cell the solution is decomposed and metallic copper deposited on the negative electrode, while the positive is peroxidized. When the battery is being discharged the action is reversed, the copper element being oxidized, and the oxide combining with the acid again forms sulphate of copper. As the copper is deposited in charging, the solution gradually loses its blue color, being converted into sulphuric acid. It is stated that Mr. Sutton will not patent his discovery.

Habitual Costiveness

Is the bane of nearly every American woman. From it usually arise those disorders that so surely undermine their health and strength. Every woman owes it to herself and to her family to use that celebrated medicine, Kidney-Wort. It is the sure remedy for constipation, and for all disorders of the kidney and liver. Try it in liquid or dry form. Equally efficient in either.—Boston Sunday Budget.

A new self-acting safety shield for circular saws, designed to guard against the constant danger which threatens the workman, is made of a plate of iron, or steel about as thick as the saw and curved to its radius, broad enough to give sufficient firmness. It is placed at a given distance from the teeth of the saw, and is furnished with movable plates and adjustment slides and screws to suit the alterations in the diameter of the saw by wear, or the substitution of smaller for larger saws, or stuff deeper than the cutting part of the saw. The shield is attached to an arm hung upon a stud concentric with the saw mandrel, and is balanced by a counterpoise under the table. The semi-circular shield is about one and a half inches deep and the same thickness as the saw. The forward end is so formed that the piece of timber to be cut raises the shield, but the latter rests upon the timber and forms a guard which prevents the workmen from bring his hands or arms into contact with the cutting edge of the saw. As soon as the timber has passed from the saw the shield returns to its original position, entirely covering the saw, and so remains until raised by the next piece of timber.

MR. H. R. STEVENS:

Dear Sir—One year ago last fall my little boy had a breaking out of ERYSIPELAS and SALT RHEUM, his face being one mattered sore of the worst description. Noticing your advertisement in the papers, I purchased two bottles of the VEGETINE, and, with the two bottles, my son was cured. I never saw anything like the Vegetine; it worked like a charm. MR. H. R. STEVENS:

Dear Sir—I was dragged down with debt, poverty and suffering for years, caused by sickness in my family and a large bill for doctoring, which did not cure them. I became discouraged, until by the advice of an old friend, I commenced using the VEGETINE, and in one month we were all well, and none of us have seen a sick day since. I want to say to all who know me, you can keep your family well the year round, by using VEGETINE.

ONE BY ONE.

One by one the days go by,
One by one our darlings die;
Budding hopes and waning day,
One by one they fade away.

One by one the seasons pass,
Frost and snow and flowers and grass;
Twig by twig the birdlings build,
Drop by drop the brooks are filled.

One by one are battles fought,
One by one are good deeds wrought;
Kingdoms, heroes, deeds and all,
One by one they rise and fall.

One by one come smiles and tears,
Hopes and sorrows, joys and tears,
Year by year our lives are told,
Step by step we near the fold.

THE THEFT OF THE STAYS.

"Hal knows a good story.

It was little Buddleston, the ensign, who spoke. There was about half a dozen of us sitting together on the deck of the troopship Leviticus. We were returning home from the Cape and used to collect here in the cool of the evening, with pipes and glasses, and amuse each other by telling stories. A great many stories were told during that pleasant voyage home, we being idle and without cares, and the circumstances and conditions of our twilight symposium stimulating to the inventive faculties. It followed, as an incidental, if not a necessary result, that many of the stories were legendary, the element of truth being, I regret to say, less highly prized than that of ingenuity in the matter of a racy plot and satisfactory finale. The story which follows has no plot to speak of, and it is for the reader to say whether the finale is satisfactory or the reverse; but good or bad, it forms an exception to the majority of those which were related on the deck of the Leviticus, in that it has a foundation in fact.

"Hal knows a good story," said little Buddleston, commonly called Buddy, as he squatted on the deck, with his comical big head, puffing tremendously at a short clay pipe.

"What's it about?" said the captain, who fingered his cigarette in a delicate manner.

"It's about stays, isn't it, Hal?" said Buddy.

"Don't, Buddy; now, don't," pleaded Harold, Lieutenant Harold, who was handsome and shy, and never liked to be called on for a story. "Not that story; I'll tell you another quite as good."

"Stays or nothing, old man," persisted Buddy, and a peremptory chorus of "Stays or nothing, old man!" rose on the still night air.

"But it would distress me to tell that story," again urged Harold. "I wouldn't have it repeated for the world; the lady is my sister's great friend. She is married now; she mightn't like it."

"All good men and true here," put in the captain. "Change the names and there's no harm done."

"We will be mute, we swear!" said Buddy, and the chorus went up. "We will be mute, we swear."

"Well, then, began the lieutenant, sadly but resignedly, "to commence with, the widow was the sweetest widow that ever lived."

An inarticulate hum of consent rose from the group of listeners, and Buddy filled his pipe, closed his eyes with an air of pleased expectancy and murmured, in a soft and parenthetic manner, as he stretched his inconsiderable length upon the deck: "All widows are jam."

"I knew her intimately," pursued Harold.

Buddy took the ebonized clay from between his lips, winked at it solemnly, and replaced it.

"I visited her frequently at her house; she gave the pleasantest little parties in the world—bachelors' parties mostly, sometimes they were of both sexes, and very often," continued Harold, hurriedly, for the captain was shaking his forefinger at the whiskey bottle; "and very often men took their wives with them. There were little meetings for supper after the theater, when we smoked cigarettes, and played quiet rubbers, and sang quiet songs, and told quiet stories, and were all very pleasant and quiet."

"And quiet," said Buddy, in a soothing tone to his cuddy; "they were pleasant and quiet."

"She lived in the west end of the town—it might have been in Bayswater, it might have been in Belgravia; that doesn't matter to you fellows—in a small, exquisitely furnished house, with nice books and dainty pictures; and she was the sweetest little widow that ever lived."

"Give a name to this widow," said Buddy, that we may breathe it tenderly, 'when night falls gently on the silver sea.'"

"I will give to the lady," said Harold, "the name of Cronin. One day," he went on, "I called at her house to arrange some details connected with a subscription she was getting up in the aid of a poor chorus singer at the opera. Mrs. Cronin was not at home, but the maid said she would return shortly, if I liked to step in and wait. The maid knew me well, of course."

"She knew him well," said Buddy sotto voce.

"I went in, and was shown up into the little drawing room on the first floor. How well I remember that room! What a snuggery it was! Flowers everywhere, and the light falling pleasantly through the Indian curtains, and an alcove, behind which you heard the cool drip of a miniature fountain, and the newest magazines and the last book of poems on the little table by the fireplace. I waited, but she did not come. I rang the bell, and the servant (what neat servants she always had) assured me that her mistress must return in a moment. I waited, but she came not, and I must go. I looked about for pen and paper to write a line, and crossed the room to the escritoire that stood beside the sofa. Something peeping out from the pillow of the sofa caught my eye. I looked at it curiously, and retreated a step. I looked at it eagerly, and went two steps nearer. Could it be? No, it could not, and yet it must be! It should be, and it should not be. It is not. It is! I caught at the silken strings that hung over the edge of the sofa; I gave it a twitch, and I held dangling in my hand a pair of stays!"

"Go slow, Hal; go slow, if you love me," said Buddy, in an excited tone.

"I tell you," said the lieutenant, his feelings also rising. "I tell you that I held in my hand a pair of stays. How shall I describe them, for I had seen no such things before?"

Buddy put his hand to his mouth and coughed; and Smith, the other ensign, gulped and swallowed his smoke.

"I cannot adequately describe them, and yet I see them now. Have you fellows ever seen any stays? You never saw stays like these; there is not such another pair in the world. Divine things, I see you now! Satin stays of heaven's own hue, touched here and there with knots of a darker shade. I am not naturally eloquent; but I said eloquent things while I held those stays. My fingers trembled as I touched the curved sides, which had been moulded to a form that Hebe would have envied. I took them gently, I carressed them, I believe I touched them with my lips. Gentlemen, I was 19, and she was my first love; it was a moment of sore temptation."

"Ay, of sore temptation!" said Buddy sympathetically.

"I don't know how long I stood there with those dear things in my hand, but the striking of the clock reminded me that I was too late to keep an appointment that I had elsewhere. Scarcely knowing what I did, I secreted my prize under my coat, and, leaving no message, and dreading to meet the maid on the stairs or in the passage, I ran down quickly, caught up hat and stick, let myself out of the door, and bolted for my chambers. I had the little sky-blue treasure under my coat, and I pressed it closely to me as I ran, rather than walked, through the streets to my rooms in the neighborhood of Piccadilly. Arrived there, I locked the door and took out the stays. As I looked at them I felt more like a poet than I have ever done before or ever done since. They would have inspired a hermit or a director of a railroad company, and they inspired me, though not in verse. A mad suggestion came to me to measure that precious girdle. I knew that though the widow's form was of an enchanting fullness, her waist was as slender as a girl's, but something tempted me to know its size in inches. I had a tape measure across the satin, placing my finger in the center to hold it. Ha! what is this? A tiny oilskin bag, fastened on the inner side, just at the spot where Hebe's tender heart should throb, and something inclosed in it. Another mad suggestion, a penknife, a hasty slit in the oilskin, and out dropped a bank of England note for £20."

The bells sounded for a change in the watch. It was a summer's night of delicious coolness. The still waters of the sea shone with a soft and soothing radiance, and behind us was a phosphorescent glow. Although we were sailing many knots an hour, we knew not the motion of the vesssel; we might be lying at anchor in some still bay.

Buddy replenished his own and the other glasses, and suggested that the break which the lieutenant had involuntarily made in his story offered a favorable opportunity for a moment's meditation on the extravagance of youth.

After a pause the lieutenant proceeded with his story.

"For a few moments," said Harold, "my mind seemed to cease working. I did not know in the least where I was or what I had done; I had no power of thought. Then I roused myself, and the first distinct notion that crossed my mind was that I was an idiot. My rashness had placed me in a fix from which for a moment I did not understand how I should escape. It was clear that I had stolen Mrs. Cronin's stays, and equally clear that in stealing the stays I had stolen a bank note for £20. Then the comical element in the situation asserted itself, and I wanted to laugh. But I checked myself, for I seemed on a sudden to see the merry mocking face of the widow, and my own merriment was converted into shame, as I heard in fancy the ringing laugh of Mrs. Cronin.

I should have to carry those stays right back again, and confess my sentimental folly to the lady, and she would laugh at me for the rest of my days."

Even then, as he told the story, the lieutenant was overcome by the memory of his humiliation; and Buddy, observing his downcast and sorrowful looks, pushed the bottle toward him in mute sympathy.

"It needed time to summon courage," he went on again, "and I could not go at once. I placed the stays, which seemed now to be mocking, me as I felt sure their mistress would, tenderly away in the cupboard, and locked the door, and threw the note into my desk, and went out and took my horse for a gallop in the park.

"Hal, old man, I have promised Mrs. Cronin £20 for her subsription list; must give it to her this afternoon. Have nothing to bless myself with but the bad half sov., with a hole in it, that Polly Dingle gave me. Come to borrow of you; found the very thing in your desk; pay you to morrow or next day. TOM.

"Panic! I never knew what panic meant before. Don't you see what had happened? My confounded brother, dear old Tom, was going to give to Mrs. Cronin the very infernal note of which I had robbed her. Probably by this time the theft was discovered; the people at the bank communicated with; some innocent creature—perhaps little Mary, her housemaid, the honestest girl alive—might be suspected, even accused; for Mrs. Cronin would never imagine the idiotic truth of the matter; and there was that Tom walking off to her with the very note as cool as you please; and she would of course recognize it at once. But he must be stopped. Perhaps he had not started, no cab horse ever went like the beast that carried me to Tom's chambers that day. The cabman said he was an old hunter, and I should suppose he wondered what new sort a hunt he was in then, for the man screeched at him from his perch and I bellowed from within, and we didn't wait to ask after any of the people we knocked over on the road. But I was too late. You may be very sure of that. The hand of fate was in it. I was not going to be let off cheaply in that way. I had got to go right through with this business, and smart for my idiocy. Tom had gone on just ten minutes ago and he had gone to Mrs. Cronin's. Of course he had; where else should he go? There was but one place in all the world to which he could have gone with that $20 note—to Mrs. Cronin. And that was the place I must go to. Why didn't I go at once? Because I was a kind of a miserable coward, and stood there wondering whether I hadn't better go and sink my stupid body in the Serpentine. If I had been bold and started off at once, I might even then, on the supposition that Tom would walk, have been first at Mrs. Cronin's and stopped him at the door. I looked at the horse that had brought me to Tom's and saw that he would do no more galloping that day. Then a horrible baseness came over me, and I thought I would leave Tom to explain as best he might to Mrs. Cronin, and I would sneak in when the breeze had settled. I took the longest possible way to her house; I went down blind alleys, and pretended that I was surprised when I came to a blank wall, and had to go back again. I stayed to witness every stupid performance in the streets, and emptied my pockets of small cash on all the lame, blind and deaf impostors whom I could prevail on to tell me the entire history of their misfortunes. The day was waning when I got to the square in which Mrs. Cronin resided.

"You may think that, once arrived, I should have had moral courage enough to carry me straight to the widow's presence, and face the matter out with a good heart. You are wrong. I hadn't any kind of courage, moral or physical, about me. I stood for five minutes on the doorstep before I pulled the bell, and I pulled it with a miserable indecision that gave me a moment's hope there would be no effect on the wire, when I would have lied to myself that the house was empty, and crawled home again. But there was a step in the passage, and the door was opened. Was Mrs. Cronin at home? Yes, she was? But she was engaged, no doubt? It was an inconvenient hour; would call again; I really had nothing of importance to say; I would leave a card. Did I think I was going to escape that way? Mrs. Cronin was not engaged—that is to say, there was no one with her but my brother; and the cook between whom and myself this interview was taking place, believed that Mrs. Cronin was particularly anxious to see me. Would I be so good as to step up stairs to the drawing room? Up those stairs, down which madness had carried me headlong not six hours before, I now walked with the cheerfulness of one who expected to meet the headsman on the landing. No sound issues from the drawing room; but I knew that there were persons there. There were no voices within as the cook opened the door and introduced me. An oppressive calm seemed to have settled on the assembly. I had expected a noise, but this was worse. Mrs. Cronin stood beside the fireplace and looked confused. Tom faced her and looked puzzled. Mary, the housemaid, stood behind them and looked stupid. I came in, and looked corpse-like. The bank note for £30 was in the hand of Mrs. Cronin.

"'The very note—the note itself,' she said. 'The identical note which Mary came crying to say she had lost four hours ago—lost along with a pair of stays into the lining of which she had stitched it.'

"'Mary! I gasped inwardly. 'Mary lost that note! Mary stitched it into the stays! What new horror is this?'

"'Here is the note back again, which is the main thing,' said Mrs. Cronin; but the odd part of the business is that I get it from Tom; and, odder still, Tom tells me that he gets it from Hal, or at least from Hal's chambers, where he had gone to borrow such a sum from him. Why, we have just put the police on the track of an innocent piano-tuner, who was here ten minutes before Hal came this morning. But surely we need have no more mystery now. Here is Hal; he will explain.'

"'Yes, Mrs. Cronin,' I said, 'I think I can explain,' and I looked at Mary, for I could not tell my wretched story while she stood there to help in the laughing.

"Mrs. Cronin, with true womanly tact, turned to Mary and told her she might run to the police station and tell them to take no further steps in the matter for the present.

"'Now, Hal,' she said, when Mary had reluctantly closed the door behind her, 'where are those stays?'

"'Mrs. Cronin,' I said, "the stays are locked in a cupboard in my room.'

"'Good gracious, child, what are they doing there?'

"And then in weak and faltering tones, I began my confession.

"Began, I say, for I had scarcely hinted how, on discovering the stays, I had in an instant loved them for their mistress's sake, and borne them away, not knowing what I did, before the blue eyes of Mrs. Cronin commenced to sparkle, and the whole of her dainty form to tremble in an effort to keep down the laughter that was coming. And then it came. She laughed. It was not her face only that laughed; she laughed all over.

"'Go away, both of you,' she said, 'I shall break into pieces. Hal, you'll kill me. Make me stop laughing; or I shall be dead in five minutes.'

"And then, when she had gained a moment's self-control, she said:

"'But, Hal, those weren't my stays at all.'

"And then she began again, and Tom after her. I never saw anybody laugh until then. "Not yours, Mrs. Cronin?' 'not your stays?'

"'Not mine a bit, Hal. They were Mary's. I gave them to her. I never wore them once. O, Tom, don't, can't you stop? Did you kiss them, Hal? Forgive me, Hal. I'm very sorry, I must laugh; its to funny. What did you say was the coolor of those stays, Hal? Poor Hal rhapsodizing over Mary's stays!'

"I thought Mrs. Cronin would have done herself an injury. In between the fits she went on again:

"Mary was stiching on the thing this morning in this room, where she had no business to be—the piano man came—she hid them hurriedly under the seat somewhere, where you found them—Tom, there's my vinaigrette behind you."

And Hal said no more; and we all sat silent and felt for him.

By-and-by Buddy said:

"Is that widow still a widow?"

"No," said Hal, sadly; "she married the honorable Tom six months afterward."

And Hal sighed; and we all sighed with Hal.

"The day is breaking," presently said the captain; and we went below.

Trees That Pick Up Things.

So many curiosities of plant life have of late years been brought into public notice that the report of the existence of a tree which picks up stones, bones, bits of wood, and other unconsidered trifles from the surface of the ground, retaining them, and suspending them in mid-air, hardly excites the incredulity nowadays with which such a statement would have been received a generation ago. Thirty years ago stories of plants whose flowers were furnished with the means of enclosing flies or even pieces of meat, as a spider seizes on its prey, and quickly surrounds it with a network of gauze, and which then actually proceeded to eat the prey thus secured almost as a spider would eat the fly—such stories, thirty years ago, would have been related to the category of "travelers tales." But we have the authority of Mr. Darwin, and any one may easily have the evidence of his own eyes, to prove that the possession of such properties by certain flowers is no fiction, but an undoubted fact. The same authority, who first brought prominently into notice the remarkable properties of the Drosera, has also shown that other plants have actually the power of progression, within certain limits, from one point to another. With such instances it requires little effort to believe the correctness of the report above alluded to, that some plants are endowed with the faculty of picking loose articles from the ground. Lieutenant Houghton, who recently visited New Guinea and several other islands and groups of islands in the Pacific, was the first, we believe, to report the existence of such a tree, though he did not explain the means by which it accomplished this unusual feat. It appears to be a species of Ficus, allied to the well-known banyan tree, which throws out from its branches air roots that eventually reach the ground, take root there, and in their turn become new stems which perform the same function, so that a single tree eventually extends so far in all directions as to form a complete forest, in which all the stems are united by the branches to each other. The prehensile tree in question similarly throws out from its branches long, flexible tendrils, which, touching the ground, do not take root there, but wine themselves round any article that may lie within reach. Eventually these quasi branches contract so that they fail to reach the ground; but the finger-like processes continue to closely grip the substance round which they twined themselves, and which are consequently suspended in mid-air. In this way articles of considerable weight may be literally picked up from the the ground by the tree, and so held in suspension.

Amber.

The best pieces of amber are now taken in the rough by Armenian merchants to Constantinople, where they are carved and chased and polished by the hand of the engraver, as mouthpieces for pipes. In the Pipe Bazaars of the great Byzantine edifice, which contains mosques, fountains, and a labyrinth of arcaded streets, each a separate bazaar—are hidden away amber mouthpieces of fabulous value, in every shade of color, lustrous as crystal, and set with diamonds and rubies. Supported by sculptured columns, and decorated with arabesques, this dimly lighted city in the heart of Stamboul is full of marvels and treasurers. Through its narrow throughfares camels and carriages and horsemen force their way, among a dense throng of people of every nation and type—Turks in muslin turbans, Persians in pyramidal bonnets of Astrakhan fur, Hebrews in yellow coats; with Greeks, Armenians, and running footmen in gorgeous liveries; and in this shifting crowd are dignitaries of the court, who spend perhaps 50,000 francs on their pipe collections; and harem-ladies wrapped in long white veils, who come for gray, amber, gold-embroidered bags of musk and sandalwood, and the sweet-scented gums made by the women of Chio, which are all sold in the Perfumery Bazaar of this great Oriental fair. Amber, little esteemed as it is at the present time in Europe, and although no longer the important source of wealth that it once was, still has a place in the luxury and religion of the East; and the dim records of its venerable history furnish us with many picturesque and poetic associations, whether we think of it in its early home amid archaic forests, or as in classic lore.

Bengal Curry.

An English correspondent says; I was for a long time resident in Calcutta, India, and with considerable difficulty obtained the details of the preparation from my native cook. They are as follows: Twelve ounces best tumeric, eight ounces coriander seed, six ounces very best ginger, five ounces very best mustard, five ounces black pepper, one and a half ounces cayenne, one-half ounce cardamums, one-half ounce cummin, one-half ounce cinnamon, one-quarter ounce pimento, in all thirty-nine and a quarter ounces, costing 7 shillings, all finely powdered and put up in separate parcels. When sent home these ingredients are put into a large bowl and thoroughly mixed together. A number of small bottles are got ready into which the powder is placed, and pressed down, and if corks are used, these are carefully sealed over so as to exclude the air entirely. One bottle at a time is opened for use, thus the quantity made will last a long time. Having secured our curry powder, at a cost of about twopence half-penny per ounce, let us now proceed to make our curry and boil our rice, a la Bengal. As a rule a knife is never employed when one is eating a curry, as it is always so thoroughly cooked that a fork and spoon are only needed. But the time occupied in cooking, of course, varies according to the meat used. For brevity, let us take a veal, say four pounds of the lean part of the breast of veal, to avoid much fat. Cut this all up in small pieces, and put them in a saucepan, with an ounce of sweet butter, two large tablespoonfuls of curry powder, two large onions cut very fine, four or five small cloves of garlic, chopped up finely, and some nice, streaky bacon cut up in thin, small slices; stir all up together, and put it on a gentle fire, covering the saucepan, and only uncovering it to stir it which should be done very frequently. The heat speedily draws out the juices of the meat, forming sufficient gravy to prevent burning, after a while the saucepan is drawn almost off the fire, so as to keep the contents at a gentle simmer only, and it continues at this until the gravy is pretty well dried up, when a large-sized breakfast-cupful of fresh milk is added gradually, so as not to cool it too much, and salt to taste. The saucepan is again placed on the fire for a few moments to bring it rapidly to the boil, then drawn back and kept once more gently simmering until quite done, stirring very frequently. It should occupy three to four hours in cooking and never be galloped. When served up to the table it ought to be as hot as possible, but all the fat must be previously skimmed off. It is well to remember that this "curry fat" is far better than butter for frying fish with. Half an hour or more before the curry is required on the table begin to cook the rice. Fine Patna or Carolina is the best, of which take one measure, putting in three such measures of water, and boil rapidly, but never on any consideration stir or shake it up. When it is perceived that the water shows no longer on the rice draw the saucepan on to the hob and give a little time for the rice to dry, which it soon does, when it will all turn out beautifully cooked and each grain separate. This is the only proper mode of cooking rice. In serving up, the curry should be in one (covered) side dish the rice in another, and both quite hot.

The St. Gothard Tunnel.

At present four daily trains are taken each way through the St. Gothard tunnel, but even with this slight traffic ventilation is a serious problem. In some of the shorter tunnels leading up to the great one the inclines are so steep that a locomotive is required at each end of the train, and the men in charge of the one at the rear have to be supplied with reservoirs of pure air from which to breathe. It is manifest that a new system must be adopted as soon as the completion of connecting lines makes the tunnel traffic heavy. With this in view, the chief engineer, Mr. Bridel, has sought the services of the Messrs. Siemens, who prescribe an electric railway on a similar system to that adopted by them in Paris. There is an abundance of water-power near the entrance to the tunnel, and that will be utilized to drive turbines working the dynamos. A one-inch copper rod will be carried through the tunnel, on which a little carriage will run in electrical connection with the electro-motor on the train. Current will thus be supplied throughout the journey, the rails serving the purpose of a return wire. The expense of this experiment will be about 180,000 francs, but if it should not succeed the value of the plant will reduce the loss 80,000 francs.

Classics in the Sierra Nevada.

The name of the post office at Ione, Nye county, Nevada, has been changed on account of the trouble they had with the mail matter going to Ione, Cal. It is now called Midas. When it was proposed to call the post office "Midas" there was a hot time in the town about the meaning and derivation of the word. One thought he had heard of a hair dye of that name, while another said it was the name of a heathen god who stole the golden fleece. A Montana man, however, settled the question. He said the name was neither new nor curious. Up in Montana he had seen a mule called Midas, and a blanked mule he was, too.

Plants in Sleeping Rooms.

In regard to malarial fever resulting from plants in sleeping rooms, it must be remembered that we have not been able to decide what produces these fevers. It is nearly certain that they do not arise from decaying vegetable matter. It is known that in some way ferment germs as very minute organisms, perhaps animal, perhaps vegetable, are called. No amount of decaying vegetable matter in a barn yard induces malarial fever. Perpetual swamps do not induce it—it is only those which are sometimes very wet and sometimes very dry, that make dangerous surroundings. We may sleep out for weeks on the grassy prairie loaded down with the weight of centuries of decaying vegetable matter without injury—but as soon as the settler comes with his plough, agues generally prevail. Then agues rarely prevail till the sun has, in some measure, dried the ground. In my intercourse with scientific men, I find the tendency of thought to be in the direction of blaming bacterian forms for these diseases. The ground, when divested of its grassy, prairie covering, cracks under great heat. In muddy meadows, by rivers, it cracks more widely and more deeply than anywhere. Down in these deep fissures, aided by the damp and darkness, the germs find a happy home. There they increase and multiply. As long as the weather remains dry, there is no harm done; but a heavy rain, or the overflow of a river, fills up the crevices. The germ-laden air is, of course, forced out as the waters flow in, and the whole atmosphere becomes poisoned. I do not think this view of the origin of malarial diseases is anything more than a hypothesis at present. It has not yet been proved. It is scarcely in the rank of a theory; yet there are many facts which make it look as if it may be correct. Now, if this really be correct, we may understand that, in some rare instances, plants in sleeping rooms might induce malarial fever. Large masses of earth, as plants in tubs or large pots require, might have stiff earth cracking open when dry, and ferment germs might then feed on diseased particles or injure, and be forced into the atmosphere when the forgotten watering time was brought to mind. This so rarely happens, as no careful plant grower would permit it, that I should say no more injury is likely to result from it than from keeping a box of parlor matches or a can of coal oil in the house. On the other hand, the moisture which the plants transpire and the carbonic acid ejected from our lungs as we sleep, and which the plants are glad to feed on whenever there is the least light to help them, makes a heavy weight in the balance to their advantage No amount of plants in a sleeping room can equal the mass about a person who sleeps in the open air, and it is well known that there is no better health restorerer than a blanket and a piece of canvas, and a few weeks of camping out.

Reason and Instinct.

Seth Green, in one of his articles says I have made some of my most interesting studies of nature in the morning. That is the time to see the insects at their best—to see the mud-wasps stinging the spiders without killing them, and packing them away where they are kept alive for weeks to be used when needed. I have seen a small green worm hanging down on a web. An ant, stationed on the limb above, pulls up the web and, just as the worm comes within reach of his tiny claws, down drops Mr. Worm. The ant pulls up again and again and worm lets out another reef and goes down. This sort of thing continues until finally the ant grapples the worm and both go down together in a grand scramble, in which the worm manages to shake off the ant. This leaves the worm on the ground. His web is so strong that the other end is still fastened to the limb above. What does Mr. Ant do? Give it up? No, sir. I have seen him go up the trunk of that tree, crawl out to the same limb, and go to work again pulling up the same web. Then, after another battle, I have known the ant to get the better of the fight and fling the worm off to his hole, three rods away.

"Why, talk about reasoning powers! The perseverance and instinct of these little creatures are wonderful. People go out to fish. They splash ar und, stand up in the boat, drop their lines three feet away, and wonder because they don't catch trout. They forget that trout can see. Fish learn the tackle and fish are, as a rule, local in their habitation. There are not as many gypsies among fish as among men. Any man who will take the pains to study fish, or who will remember a little of what he reads about them, can catch them. They are smart, but our brains will beat them. I remember once of fishing for salmon trout for a long time and taking nothing. Finally I concluded to get down and look into the water, and so throwing my coat over my head, I got the required shade and peered down. The salmon would sail up and look at the minnow. Then, with a quick dart, he would close his teeth round one-half the minnow and open them again like a flash. He did not attempt to eat the minnow, and half of the severed body would drop to the bottom. When it had fallen to the bed of the lake the salmon would go down leisurely and eat it. The next time when I dropped my hook and felt the quick bite of the trout I let out enough line to send the hook to the bottom, and the result was that when the salmon went down for his meal he was fooled and I had him."

Too Much Drink.

The natives of Bengal are becoming ruinously fond of drink. Among nearly all classes, and especially in the lower, drunkenness is continually increasing, so that one of the local newspapers pronounces it "the bane of the country," and calls upon the influential members of the community to make vigorous efforts to suppress it. The blame is laid chiefly upon the present excise system—what that system is the papers do not tell us—but a writer in England intimates that another cause may be responsible for the evil. There has been a large increase in the material prosperity of the Province, and, reasoning from well-known facts in England, this writer thinks that the blame may after all lie here. He inquires whether in former times such persons as could afford it did not drink as much as they do now.

Congressional Convention.

A convention of the Democratic and Conservative party of the Seventh Congressional District is hereby called to meet in Gadsden on the 10th day of of August, 1882, at 12 o'clock M., for the purpose of nominating a candidate to represent said District in the 40th Congress. JOHN H DISQUE.
Chairman Congressional Ex. Com.

The Cleburne county Democratic Convention, held on the 8th inst; nominated Hon. Wm. J. Alexander for the Legislature. His opponent, Mr. W. R. Barker, withdrew his name after the second ballot, and great harmony prevailed. The following are the delegates appointed to the Congressional convention. Hon. W. P. Howell Hon. O. W. Shepherd, Hon. A. W. Denman, and Rev. J. J. Teague, a fine delegation.

There has been a rebellion against English pretention in Egypt, headed by Ariba Pasha, the minister of war. It culminated on the 11th in the English fleet opening a terrific bombardment on the city of Axeladria and a complete dismantling of the forts. At this writing the city is in flames. The Egyptian army evacuated the city and are suppose to have set it on fire.

The colored people of Montgomery county held a convention in the city of Montgomery this week, to consider question as to what they should do as between the Democratic ticket and the ticket put out by the malcontents at Birmingham. Col. Troy, candidate on the Democratic ticket for State Senator, and his Republican opponent, Sewell, were invited to address the meeting. They did so. The speech of Col. Troy was received with great favor. The speech of the Radical was received coldly. The meeting was presided over by the leading colored Republican of Montgomery county, Isaac Belser. The meeting unanimously decided to support the Democratic State and county tickets.

A prominent Republican of Jacksonville calls the Democrats who have gone off into Independentism "broken down Democrats." He say the Radicals, niggers and "broken down" Democrats will beat the O'Neal ticket. When the day of election comes, he will be astonished to see so few "broken down" Democrats in Calhoun. Most of the Democrats of Calhoun who went off into Independentism, some years ago, have seen their error and returned to the fold of the organised party long ago.

How long will it be before Sheffield will be a pronounced Radical, as Sloss now is? Both started out as Independent Democrats—oh, such good Democrats. They proclaimed their democracy from the stamp; and yet we see Sloss a delegate in the Radical State Convention and Sheffield accepting the nomination for Governor of the Radical party of Alabama. It cannot be too often said that Independentism is the straight road to Radicalism.

The delegates to the late Radical Convention at Montgomery, from the Selma Congressional District, went home very much dissatisfied with the adoption of the Birmingham ticket of Independents, and have called a meeting of the Republicans of that district to repudiate it and put out a straight Republican ticket. Brother Sheffield will be left about as bad as Parson Pickens was, if this thing continues.

We learn from a private and reliable source that there was just exatly seven men in the Greenback-Inaependent "Conference" lately held at Birmingham, and that the meeting took place in the office of Ex-Governor Smith, a Republican. Nevertheless they put out a ticket and a platform bigger than the conference itself, and next day the Radical State Convention came along and swallowed the whole affair—ticket, platform, and all. So it may be safely assumed that the Greenbackers, Independants and Radicals have merged in this Sate, so far as their leadership can pledge them to such a course. We do not believe, however, that the Greenbackers and Independents of Calhoun County will consent to be traded off. They are self respecting men and will claim a voice themselves as to the kind of company they are placed in. The result of this unnatural alliance will be to bring back all the better class of Green back and Independent element into the ranks of the Democratic party.

☞The Republican convention held in Mobile, last Friday, adopted the following resolution:

Resolved, That this convention hereby tender our thanks to the Hon John B. Gaston, M. D., of Montgomery, for his able exposure of the convict system of Alabama.

Dr. Gaston, and the editors of the Jacksonville Republican, the Selma Times, Eutaw Mirror, Fort Payne Journal, and two or three other Alabama newspapers—professedly Democratic—deserve well of the Republican party for the aid and comfort contributed from it through misrepresentations respecting the convict system of our State.—Livingston Journal.

Why bless your dear soul, honey, it is Dr. Gaston and the papers you mention and others that you have to thank for saving the Democratic party from attack on this issue. If it had been left to your sort, who wanted to cover this sin up, the Radicals and Independents could have claimed credit for inaugurating reform in this direction. As it is they have to play second fiddle to the Democratic party, and come in on no issue atall, for the Democratic party was long ago pledged to reform in the convict system, so far as nine tenths of the Democratic press of the State could wedge it. Who is it the Radicals of Mobile are thanking for his fearless and manly expose of abuses in our convict system? Dr. Gaston—a Democrat. Let them continue to pass resolutions of thanks. It is only a confession that the Democrats have already started the work of reform. Because the Radicals condemn the convict system is no evidence that it is good. We confess, though, we had rather they had not fallen in with the Democracy on this head, as it may have a tendency to drive weak men from the support of a measure in itself right.

"Professedly Democratic." What do you mean by this, dear? Do you mean to impugn the Democracy of all the newspapers in Alabama which have been bold and honest enough to point the Democratic party to the path of reform of abuses? If so, you will read nearly all of them out of the party, and the few superanuated "presses" left won't be competant to lead any kind of a party or beat down any sort of opposition. No, a free, fearless and honest press is the paladium of the Democratic party in Alabama. It is a better friend to the party than the subservient press that can discover no wrong in its own party, and that would never advocate a reform until driven to it by the lash of the opposition.

Radical Convention Notes.

From the Montgomery Adv. 7th inst.

Joseph H. Sloss, present incumbent of the Marshalship of the Huntsville District, has masqueraded a long time as an Independent and Greenbacker. Yesterday he was regularly enrolled as a brother in full communion in the Republican party, and was received and recognized as a delegate from Colbert county. He is commended for going where by right he and all others who antagonize the Democracy as he has done, ought to go. It is their proper place. The time for trying to deceive the people has passed. It is Democracy or Republicanism, and Mr. Sheffield & Co., make up their minds to that is sue at once. The Radicals yesterday claimed all the opponents of the Democracy as their own and they are correct.

When Mr. Turner was nominated for chairman of the Radical Executive Committee yesterday, Mr. Sheets said Mr. Turner sends up in place of a speech a picture of the next Governor of Alabama. Many darkey's rushed up crying, "Whar's dat pictur of Gen. O' Neal." Somebody informed them that it was a picture of Sheffield. The Federal office seekers of the colored persuasion had never heard of Sheffield. He was the great Democrat until beaten by Caldwell for Congress. Gen. O'Neals, great county of Lauderdale had no representative either in person or by proxy in the pie-bobi convention yesterday.

The only really clever thing in the Federal office holders and Federal office seekers convention yesterday, was the wholesome denunciation of Hayes, the fraud, the 8 to 7 infamy, the monument of all scoundrelism, and of all "counts." These rads all ceased their cries of fraud when the name of Hays was mentioned. Between 8 to 7 and Col. Seawell for State Senator, give us Capt. Ben Gardner and the Le compton constitution.

Chairman Turner in his opening speech evidently had a notion of making himself solid with the Administration, but Post-Master YOUNGBLOOD, of Union Springs, went beyond him and got through resolutions favoring the boss patronage dispenser for President in [illegible].

Endorsing the Independents.

The following is the Montgomery Advertiser report of the debate that ensued in the Radical convention at Montgomery, on the 7th inst. on the proposition to endorse the ticket put out by the Greenbackers and Independents at Birmingham the day before.

Mr. Sheats, of Winston said it was evident there was a good deal of gas in the convention, he moved the recess be occupied in allowing the members to 'shoot it off."

Loud calls were made for Sheats. He rose and urged that no time be lost in useless speaches. Upon the deliberation of this convention success in '84 greatly depended. He cited Mahone as an example of what could be done, and descanted at length upon what a little man weighing only 90 pounds had by this fact and firmness, accomplished. What had been done by him in Virginia could be done in Alabama. In Virginia we had two Senators, a Governor, and we had the majority in the legislature.

Mr. Knox, of Chilton, said Mr. Sheats had referred to Mahone. He wanted to say that a more miserable little scoundrel never lived. He had served in the war with him and knew him. He was a miserable little coward. He had risen to power over Republican votes.

Loud calls were made for Walker, col. of Dallas who referred to the caucus at Birmingham, on the 5th. It was questionable whether that caucus was represented by delegates from all the counties. He did not believe it. He advocated the nomination for a State ticket by the convention. He doubted the strength of the Independents, who seemed to be afraid to come down here among us. Let the Independents nominate a ticket and let the Republicans nominate theirs.

C. O. Harris of Montgomery spoke next. He didn't exactly favor Walker's sentiments. The object was to redeem Alabama from Bourbon Democratic rule, and if the Independents wanted to hitch on and help do it, he said hitch! He wasen't so much for office as for the repeal of bad laws. As to Mahone he gloried in what he had done. He wanted a party that would protect colored Republicans at the ballot box, and if Greenbackers and Independents could organize and do it, he favored hitching on to them. He didn't like Independents much, but it was the best he could get for the present. When Walker sees with what unanimity this convention endorsed the Birmingham nominees he (Walker) would go home hurrahing for the Greenbackers, Independents, Mahone, and Republicanism.

Walker again spoke and said the Independents were a disorganized mass. It was not known who they are or what they wanted to do. Independents in Alabama were not like Independents in Virginia. He told of what Mahone had done in Virginia, and asked what the Independents done in Alabama? He didn't approve turning over the party to be organized Independents who had no head or tail. They were merely a set of dissatisfied people because they hadn't been put in office by the Democrats. Let them do something worthy of it and we will take them in.

A colored delegate from Limestone contented that colored Republicins couldn't get their rights at the ballot box without the help of the white people. He favored union with the Independents and told how the Republicans in his district were indebted to them.

J. K Green colored of Montgomery, spoke in the same strain. The eminent Dr. Gaston, of Montgomery, had said enough in his address at Mobile to damn forever the Bourbon Democracy of Alabama. He was good Democratic authority. Did the gentlemen from Dallas want to nominate a straight Republican ticket and be run over by the Democracy as usual? The Republicans and Independents were dependent on each other. He denounced on virulent terms putting colored people in the Penitentiary, for insignificant offenses like stealing a pig. He'd rather be a slave in a cotton patch under the overseer's whip than to live under this Democratic administration. He referred in complimentary to the resolution of the late Episcopal convention of Alabama in regard to the education of the negro. Put out a straight Republican ticket and you will do just what the Democrats want you to do.

Loud calls for Rev. Bryant, who said the question was not so much a union with Independents and Greenbackers as of unanimity among Republicans. He was severe upon the office seekers hanging around at Washington. There were some good Federal office holders, like Gov. Smith and Marshal Osborn, there were others who are "contemptible nincompoops and pistoreens." (Applause.) There are white Republicans that would scratch a negro put on a Republican ticket as quick as any Democrat would. There are those in the party seeking office who ought to be kicked out, and the quicker ten times the better.

He had carried his gun in defense of the rights of the colored people, and he was ready to shoulder it again. He bitterly denounced what he termed the unjust laws of Alabama, and illustrated them by an incident at Seale, Russell County. A negro was tried for stealing five chickens, and a white man for stealing thirty head of cattle. The darkey got five years in the penitentiary and the white man one. The Judge asked the darkey what he had to say. He answered nothing, but I wish I had stole thirty head of cattle.

He contemned those negroes who vote the Democratic ticket and go around saying "Mars Bob" or 'Mars Jim.' Hell's full of them! I never was a slave, but if I had I would have been in hell long ago! He was willing to bridge the bloody chasm, and forget the past, but scorned the friend who would hold him by one hand and stab him with the other! His friend (Stroback) had said he was more of a politician than a preacher. He was no politician, but if he was and had been contesting for a seat in Congress two years he would have the seat or the money one. (Hurrahs and loud applause)

Blevens, of Dallas, spoke in favor of Birmingham ticket. He favored giving the negro office sometimes. If a negro goes to a Department at Washington and applies for an office and a white Republican was consulted as to his character, he would say he was the biggest rascal in Alabama. He wanted justice for the negro.

DeLemos said he supported negro Republicans in opposition to white Republicans, because he thought it was right. The two Independents from Lee county, introduced no bill in the last Legislature to repeal the election law, or do anything to relieve the down trodden Republicans of Alabama. He was willing to admit the Independents after they had been long enough on the mourner's bench. He opposed the Birmingham ticket.

A delegate: didn't the gentlemen De Lemos) vote for Senator Morgan?

DeLemos: I did and I have no apology to make. Senator Morgan voted for the confirmation of leading colored men when white Republicans opposed them. [Loud Applause]

And the convention then endorsed the Birmingham ticket. The following is the ticket in full.

For Governor, James L. Sheffield, of Marshal

For Secretary of State, A. H. Townsend, of Butler.

For Attorney General, Paul Jones, of Madison.

For Treasurer, John W. Montgomery of Jefferson.

For Auditor, John B. Shields, of Walker.

Superintendent of Education, Dr. Ira Wood, of Jackson.

SUMMER RESIDENCE.
One house and lot in Jacksonville, containing seven acres, known as the Judge Foster residence. The house is most tastefully built and situated in the most desirable part of town for residence. A never failing well supplies ice cold water the year round. The place is abundantly supplied with fine fruit, including an extensive Grapery. The extensive lawn in front is clothed with huge native oaks and the ground beautifully laid off. It is a very desirable place for some gentleman South of here who wants a summer residence in this part of the State. The owner gave $3 000 for the place. Will sell for $1500 if taken in 3 months. Reason for selling—owner moved out of the State.

CROSS PLAINS LOCALS.

We have had another refreshing season and the farmers are as happy as they can be. Surely Providence is smiling upon our land.

Our people did not exeart worth a cent on the 4th notwithstanding the cheap rates. The sentiment of the South seems to have under gone a great change for your reporter can remember when this historic day was celebrated by our people with grea. pomp and display. Now the majority of us prefer to stay at home and spend it like other days.

Miss Dixie Caller opened a two months school last monday. She opened with several more pupils than she wanted, thereby showing that our people appreciate the educational advantages with which they are surrounded. Miss Caller is very popular with her patrons and deservedly so.

Capt. Alex McCollister and family left last Wednesday for New York. They will probably remain until September, We wish them a pleasant time.

We are sorry to hear of the illness of our very efficient town Marshal. Capt. Charles Metcalf. We hope to see him on the streets again soon.

Messrs. Little & Dailey have sold their stock of groceries to Messrs Loffland & Gibbony. We wish the new firm success.

OCCASIONAL.

ALEXANDRIA LOCALS.

Your humble writer finished laying by cotton last Friday, and prospects best we have ever known on the same land; so you can imagine the emotion with which this is penned, and peling Home Supporter, no doubt you will allow him to indulge in a little presumption, and criticism in support of an appreciated home.

Glad to see Mr. Gogberry, (the new Localist) come out in eloquent strains, we read with much interest and approbation, but were forced to admit that a local is similar to lagger beer too much gass or foam renders it unwholesome.

Our town is becoming lively with the chat of politicians, such as uncle Johny B. we like to hear politics discussed, consequently desire a competition with Hon J. D. Hammond.

The all day singing at Hebron, on the 4th inst. was a success, fine music displayed by many voices, but the germ of the days happiness which was dinner was almost mutilated by a heavy rain. Many victuals were spoiled by the rain coming so suddenly, though we lost sight of our appetite in the afternoon taking a buggy ride with the belle of Ohatchee, Miss M. M. On our return, we boys had a "glorious" time in the way of a party given by Mrs L. D. Miller; the Earnest Workers were there with their nice boxes, but didn't stop at five cents, our friend R. G Ragan was so enthused, that he bid off one half doz, peaches at fifty five cents and he gave them to Miss S.--too.

We are all struck with the fair sex of Cane creek.

Master Boyd Green, left for Atlanta, Ga. Friday to resume his former position as clerk for the firm of Moore, Marsh & Go.

Oxford boys come over to our entertainment, in gangs. No wonder. Many things are here that tend to happiness. This valley bordered by the picturesque mountainous scenery, the cool fountains, luxuries, bountiful harvests and fair daughters it contains places it among the lovliest spots on earth.

In our valley one-half bushel small grain is being given away in order to sell one-half bushel, consequently only one $1,00 for wheat and 50 cts, for oats, is realized. Howcan farmers sell at such prices a nd pay $1,50, for corn?

We are encouraged by learning through ✕ Roads locality, the people of the vicinity endorse our opinion opposing stock, and local prohibition laws, but upholding road law.

The esteem young friend, Dr. Frank Landers, honored us. as guest Sunday. The people of Ohatchee can rely on him as a true-worthy physician.

Mr. O. P. Allen, informs us that he had one hundred dozen bundles oats, that thrashed 117 bushels. Who can beat that?

Mr. Editor. Watermelons are plentiful now, and the first opportunity we will cause you to smile.

HOME SUPPORTER.

Judge Jere S. Black, who is in Chicago on legal business, has been interviewed by one of the enterprising scribes of that city. He expressed the unabserved opinion that General Hancock, as a matter of coarse, will be the next Democratic candidate for the Presidency, and he thinks that the present ou look indicates th t he Hon. James G. Blaine will be his Republican opponent. He thinks free trade, or rather "fair trade," will play a large part in the next Presidential campaign. He predicts the election of the Democratic State ticket in Pensylvania.

THE CONVICT QUESTION NOT AN ISSUE.

The Independent candidates for the legislature in Limestone county have declared a platform on which they appeal for support. The third plank is its opposition to the present convict system. In reviewing this platform and in exposing the attempt of its selfish designers, the Courier says:

This idea of reform in the convict system is entirely a Democratic idea, originated and discussed by the Democratic press of the State It is a difficult question, and the correct solution of it will require much thought and discussion; but the Democracy has shown its thorough desire to do the very best that can be done with it, and there is no doubt but what the subject will receive the careful attention of the next Democratic legislature. We are reminded in this connection of one of Æsop's fables A cock scratching for food for himself and his hens, found a precious stone; on which he said: "If your owner had found thee, and not I, he would have taken thee up, and have set thee in thy first estate; but I have found thee for no purpose." So it is with the convict question. Leave it to its owners, the Democrats, who originated it, and they will take care of it properly; while these Independents have found it for no purpose, for they can do nothing in the Democratic legislature."

For that object exactly did the Democratic Press of this State take up the question in all its bearings, and point out to the party the dangers that have attended in the past and the reforms needed for the future. It was done thoroughly, radically, and effectively. The general verdict of public opinion was that changes must be made, and as the Courier says there is no doubt of the Legislature's working earnestly upon the difficult problem. The calling attention to the evils was done by Democrats they were proved and acknowledged by Democrats, and the reforms will be made by Democrats. As we predicted, the grievances would be seized upon by any incipient opposition, and, therefore, with others we went to work to anticipate any such issue, to take the wind out of such Independent sails, to settle the matter in advance and to prevent its being used by any possible opposition. It has been done. The people know all about the whole matter, they know whence came their information, they know that it was first opened by a Democratic committee of a Democratic legislature, and made public through the columns of Democratic papers. They likewise know that the Democratic candidates for the legislature everywhere stand ready to do all that can be done to secure the convict's welfare and the States, best interests. An issue on the convict question, therefore is an impossibility. Selma Times

The Cedartown Advertiser don't propose to be used without pay. Nearly a whole page of a recent issue of that paper was nearly filled up with communications arguing the claim of candidates for office. whereupon the editor says: "Our opinions are our own and are not for sale, but articles over signatures espousing the claims of individuals for office if published in these columns, will charge for as advertisments. This rule is an old one with the best journalists in the country; with us it is irrevokable and will not be deviated from in favor of any one. Our office and outfit constitute our stock in trade, our only means of sustenance, and it is no more in accordance with reason or principle of right for a person aspiring to an office or emolument to demand the fruit of our exertions than it would be for him to ask the liveryman to furnish him gratis with a turn out to prosecute a canvass.

TATE SPRINGS.

Health and Pleasure for Alabamians.

Already fourteen States are represented by the guests in attendance at Tate Springs, East Tennessee. A good company has been there all winter and has rapidly increased since the 1st of March The demand for the water has doubled in the past six months, and is being shipped now to all points of the union at the rate of 2,000 bbls. per. annum. We have seen no natural mineral water so strongly endorsed as a remedial agent for dyspepsia and diseases of the liver, stomach, bowels and kidneys. Our doctors prescribe it and hundreds in Alabama are daily drinking the water at home and can attest its power over disease. When the summer travel sets in, more of our Alabama "summer resorters" will be found at Tate Springs than at any other resort outside of the State. Dr. J. S. Weatherly of Montgomery, is resident physician. The new building is all complete and furnished Send for for large 40 page pamphlet containing full information on all points. Messrs. THE GULLETT IMPROVED MAGNOLIA COTTON GIN, CONDENSER & FEEDER.

THE MAGNOLIA GIN

has come in competition with nearly every other Gin on the market, at State Fairs, etc., and in every instance has established its superiority in the following essentials viz:

Light Draft,

QUICK AND GOOD WORK AND FINE SAMPLE.

TESTIMONIALS.

ALEXANDRIA, ALA, Dec. 15, 1880.

Messrs. Berrys & Co., Rome, Ga.,

DEAR SIRS: In reply to your enquiry, I will say the sixty saw Light Draft Gullett Gin bought of you last fall gives perfect satisfaction. I have been ginning seventeen years, and I have yet to see a Gin that makes as good a sample from dirty cotton as the Gullett. The feeder works perfectly in every respect. I would not have a gin without one

W. PHIL COOPER

GRIFFIN, GA., March 1, 1879.

We, the undersigned are using the Gullett Improved Light Draft Cotton Gin. The Gin is of superior workmanship. For fast ginning, safety in running, and light draft, (to do the same work,) we think it has no equal; but the most important feature is the attachment for opening and improving the sample. The best cotton is improved by it so as to bring form ½ to ¾ cent, and stained and dirty cotton from ½ to 1 cent per pound more in market than other Gins.

W. J. BRIDGES
T. W. MANLEY.
J. T MANLEY.

ROME, GA., March 7th, 1881.

We, the undersigned buyers and shippers of cotton in Rome, Georgia, take pleasure in recommending the new Improved Light Draft Gullett Gin as the best Gin known to us, for the reason that it turns out smoother and cleaner cotton with less nap, and consequently is worth more money

MANHOOD

How Lost, How Restored.

Just published, a new edition of Dr Culverwell's Celebrated Essay on the radical cure of SPERMATORRHŒA or Seminal Weakness, Involuntary Seminal Losses, Impotency, Mental and physical Incapacity, Impediments to marriage, etc; also, Consumption, Epilepsy and Fits, induced by self-indulgence or sexual extravagance, &c.

The celebrated author, in this admirable Essay clearly demonstrates, from a thirty years successful practice, that the alarming consequences of self-abuse may be radically cured, pointing out a mode of cure at once simple, certain, and effectual, by means of which every sufferer, no matter what his condition may be, may cure himself cheaply, privately and radically.

AGRICULTURE.

How to Check a Bone Spavin.—Bone spavin consists of inflammation of the membranes covering the bones of the hook joint or of the bones themselves. It may result from constitutional causes: from weakness of the bones caused by overfeeding upon corn, which is too rich in starch and deficient in the phosphates which go to build up the bony frame; from hard work, or from bad shoeing, which throws the foot out of balance and induces strains of the joints of the leg. Spavins are very common because these causes are common. The spavin may be checked best by the application of cold water, by which the inflammation is reduced, and then by stimulating liniments, which produce absorption of the products of the inflammation. A spavin ends by the formation of a bony growth about the parts affected, and when this is completed the joint becomes cemented together and remains stiff but the tenderness and pain are lost. Cure of an old spavin is, therefore out of question. After the cold applications have been tried without result, blistering, firing and setons under the skin over the part are usually resorted to.

Corn smut has received considerable public attention of late. When the kernels of a green ear in the field enlarge and turn black, puffing out beyond the husk and becoming, finally, a filthy mass of dust and corruption, that is corn-smut. In my boyhood we didn't mind it much. There would be an ear or two touched with it at husking time. Some years more than others. None of the elders said it was poison, though they knew about spurred rye and said that was deadly. The smut rarely covered the butt of the ear entirely, and whatever part of the cob seemed worth saving was broken off and tossed among the "pig" corn. The smutty husks, etc., were generally left in the field, often where cattle were soon to come gleaning, but I never heard of injury done to any animal. In dry weather the black substance was dusty like the dust of a puff ball and passed unnoticed like that. Spurred rye, like corn-smut, is caused by the lodgment of parasitic fungus seed in the sappy germ of the grain. The fungoid rye projects, or spurs, long and black, from the head of ripening seed, and might pass the unscientific eye for mouse-dung. It yields some 30 per cent. of the oil of ergot while corn smut contains 4.2 per cent. In high stages of civilization spurred rye is worth more in market than perfect grain. A walk through the corn fields in August and September would rid the crop of smut entirely.

Every farmer and gardener should make it a point of duty to experiment in such cases as come recommended with a probability of improvement, and report to the press the result of his labors. No heavy outlay is advisable, until such time as practical results of value warrant their continuance or increase. A practical gardener makes the following statement, which any one can test for himself whether or not the trial is worthy of endorsement: "Last year as a test of a frequent practice among growers of melons and squashes, I pinched the ends of the long main shoots of the melons, squashes and cucumbers and left some to run at their own will. One squash plant sent out a single stem reaching more than forty feet, but did not bear any fruit. Another plant was pinched until it formed a compact mass of intermingling side shoots eight feet square, and it bore sixteen squashes. The present year a musk-melon plant thus pinched in covers the space alloted to it, and it has set twenty-three specimens of fruit, the most of which have been pinched off.

Cracked Hoofs.—A cracked hoof can only be repaired by new growth from the coronet, where the new horn is secreted. Horn consists of precisely the the same elements as hair, and is really a solid, compact form of hair growth; the hair of the skin ends where the growth of the horn begins, and this goes on downward to repair the constant wear at the sole of the hoof-crust. But a crack in the hoof will always extend up into new and weak growth because the horn is expanded by the pressure of the horse's weight upon the foot. To prevent this the sides of the crack must be supported and held together by some means. This may be done by boring holes through the horn on each side of the crack and putting horseshoe nails through and drawing the hoof together and clinching the ends of these nails on each side. The top of the crack should then be burned across so as to obliterate the opening and form a solid starting place for the new growth. The hoof should be kept soft and elastic by frequent dressings of equal parts of glycerine and water.

In the use of extra food for milch cows discrimination should be used in the apportionment of varying quantities to individual animals, according to their special requirements, their milching capacity and their condition as to age. Some cows will pay well for a liberal allowance in increased supplies of milk and require more liberal diet to make up for the large drain upon their system, while other cows do not require and will not pay for forced keep. Heifers two and three years old, when milking freely require some extra food to enable them to grow in size, as well as to milk abundantly. For want of this many animals which milk freely with their first calves are checked in their growth, and never attain their proper size.

Weeds.—The rapidity with which weeds multiply is marvelous. A single plant of purslane will, when fully grown, mature nearly a million seeds; the roadside mullein, 600,000; the ox-eye daisy, 13,500; the Canada thistle, about 10,000; the Mayweed, 30,000 and the burdock, 26,000. In view of these facts, we should let no noxious weed escape. This should be the war cry, especially during the months of July and August. "Plow them up, dig them up, or cut them up, or cut them down." Not one should mature its seeds.

The Wax Plant.—Washing the leaves of the wax plant occasionally is the very best treatment for it. When washing, brushing with a soft brush about the axils of the leaves will tend to keep the plant free from mealy bugs, one of the worst enemies. When the plant commences its growth supply it once a week with weak manure water.

Horseshoes.—A correspondent says: "The best remedy that I have ever found for horses clicking or striking their hind shoes against the forward ones is to put on high toe-calks and low heels on the hind shoes. If my brother smiths are incredulous concerning this remedy, I advise them to try it and be convinced".

Bees Injuring Grapes.—Two bills have been introduced in the California legislature to forbid the keeping of bees because of the damage they are said to do the ripening grapes.

Charred corn is one of the best things which can be fed to hens to make them lay, not as a regular diet, but in limited quantities each day.

DOMESTIC.

Moulds of Rice.—One-half pint of rice, which must be put into an oat meal kettle with one and one-half pint of cold water and boiled until nearly soft: then pour into it one pint of rich milk, and boil again, stirring occasionally. Sweeten with one-half pound of sugar, and flavor with two and one-half teaspoonfuls of rose water or lemon essence. Dip blance mange moulds in cold water and fill with the rice, which should be cooked to a consistency of mush. It will harden in a short time and turn out nicely on a flat dish. Eat with preserves and cream, whipped cream and jelly; custard sauce; or only cream, sugar and nutmeg.

Sweet Tomato Pickle.—One peck green tomatoes, six large onions, sliced; sprinkle a teacupful of salt over them and let stand over night; drain off in the morning, and add two quarts of water and one quart of vinegar; boil fifteen or twenty minutes; then put in a sieve to drain. Take four quarts of vinegar, two pounds of brown sugar, one-quarter pound of white mustard seed and two tablespoonfuls of ground allspice, the same of cloves, cinnamon, ginger, and mustard, and one teaspoonful of cayenne pepper; scald altogether, and pour over the tomatoes while hot.

Cherry and batter pudding is made of one pint of milk, two well-beaten eggs, a tablespoonful of melted butter, one teaspoonful and a half of baking powder, a little salt, flour enough to make a batter a little thicker than for griddle cakes. In this batter stir as many canned, or dried, or fresh cherries as you choose, or can afford to put in; steam for three quarters of an hour in a pudding dish which can be sent to the table. Eat with sauce.

Scalloped potatoes make a nice dish for tea. Prepare in this proportion: Two cups of mashed potatoes, two tablespoonfuls of cream or milk, and one of melted butter: salt and pepper to taste. Stir the potatoes, butter and cream together, adding one raw egg. If the potatoes seem to moist, beat in a few fine bread-crumbs. Bake in a hot oven for ten minutes, taking care to have the top a rich brown.

A Dainty Dish.—The following is a useful dish if pressed for time; Take a round sponge-cake, cut off the top or bottom, take out the inside, leaving a crust about an inch thick; soak the crumbs which has been taken out in some sherry and put it back again with some whipped cream or some preserve beaten up with milk at the top. If liked better, any kind of fresh preserved fruit may be put in instead of the crumb.

Tripe Sauce a la Bordelaise.—Take two pounds of tripe and lay in salt and water over night; cut into strips about as long as the forefinger and about as wide; put into a stew-pan one tablespoonful of butter or clarified drippings, or better, two tablespoonfuls of sweet oil, with half a tablespoonful of chopped parsley and half a chopped onion; when your butter drippings, or oil is very hot, put in tripe, and cook until brown, and salt and pepper to suit taste.

To carve a turkey, place your fork in the lower part of the breast, so as to have the turkey at perfect command. If you understand your business, the entire carving of the fowl may be done without extracting the fork. First remove the wing and leg on one side, then the other wing and leg. Then slice off the breast, remove the wishbone, the neck bones and the neck itself. Then cut through the ribs, and the job is fairly done.

Suet Dumplings.—Two cups of fine crumbs soaked in a cup of hot milk, one cup of powdered suet, four beaten eggs, one teaspoonful cream-of-tar (mixed with one tablespoonful of flour, half a teaspoonful of soda dissolved in milk,) and a little salt. Beat the eggs int, the soaked crumbs; add salt, suet, sugar, lastly the flour. Beat and knead hard, make into balls, put into floured cloth, leave room to swell, tie tightly and boil one hour. Eat hot, with sauce.

Almond frosting makes a delicious addition to a loaf of white cake. Beat the whites of two eggs to a stiff frost—so stiff, in fact, that you could turn the platter upside down if necessary. Stir in half a pound of pulverized sugar and about a quarter of a pound of almond blanched and powdered to a paste. Flavor with rose water, and, if you choose, a few drops of almond extract.

Barley Soup.—Boil one pint of pearl barley in one quart of stock till it is reduced to a pulp, pass it through a sieve, add as much more stock as will be required to make the puree of the consistency of cream; put the soup on the fire, when it boils stir into it, off the fire, the yolk of an egg beaten up with a gill of cream; add half a pat of fresh butter, and serve with small dice of bread fried in butter.

Pretty comforters for summer use are made of thin cotton cloth commonly called cheese cloth. Tack them with yarn of some bright color and bind the edge to match. Dust shakes out from these more rapidly than from almost any other material, and while affording warmth enough they look cool.

One of the greatest helps in the kitchen is washing or salsoda. If a strong solution is kept in a bottle, and a little is used in cleaning tin or iron ware, it will more than reward the housekeeper for her trouble. There is nothing so nice for milk utensils.

A good pickle for meat is made by taking three pounds of salt, one ounce of saltpetre, three quarters of a pound of brown sugar and two-gallons of cold water. Beef will be sufficiently cured if it remains in this solution ten days.

Professor Riley says that kerosene oil is sure death to insects in all stages, and the only substance with which we may hope to destroy their eggs. Oil mix with milk, fresh or sour, and thus may be diluted to any extent.

If you want good starch, mix it with cold water, add boiling water until it thickens, then add a desert spoonful of sugar and a small piece of butter. This makes a stiff and glossy finish to that of the laundry.

A simple and good thing for cleaning nickle-plated articles, is made as follows: Take half a cup of whiting, fill it with water put it in a bottle and add a teaspoonful or a trifle more of ammonia.

Lemons will keep better and fresher in water than in any other condition. Put in a crock and covered with water they can be preserved in winter for two or three months.

HUMOROUS.

Exaggeration: The late De Goy had a mania for financial exaggeration. One day he met a friend to whom, with a sorrowful countenance, he remarked that it was no use—he never was lucky at cards. "Why, what's the matter?" "Matter enough! I've just been up at the club. Sat down to play with Raymond Deslandes—luckiest beggar that I ever saw and—well, the long and the short of it is I've lost 40,000 francs." "Why, I saw him only five minutes ago, and he told me he had won just 40 francs." De Goy, coldly—"Oh, that's some of his humbug."

If You Are Sick, Read

the Kidney-Wort advertisement in another column, and it will explain to you the rational method of getting well. Kidney-Wort will save you more doctor's bills than any other medicine known. Acting with specific energy on the kidneys and liver, it cures the worst diseases caused by their derangement. Use it at once. In dry and liquid form. Either is equally efficient, the liquid is the easiest, but the dry is the most economical.—Interior.

Speaking of "piling it on;" That reminds us of an old New Orleans creole who said, when mention was made of the fact that there was no yellow fever in New Orleans while Butler was in command of that city. He said: "Of course, we've no yellow fevaire when ze General Butlaire was in New Orleans. It is impossible to have ze yellow fevaire and General Butlaire ze same year. Le bon Dieu will not allow cela, be gar. Impossible."

Fear Not.

All kidney and urinary complaints especially Bright's Disease, Diabetes and Liver troubles, Hop Bitters will surely and lastingly cure. Cases exactly like your own have been cured in your own neighborhood, and you can find reliable proof at home of what Hop Bitters has and can do.

Sad case; A gummy whose fortune is far from being as ample as he pretends, makes a specialty of showing himself in front of expensive restaurants, where, however, he does not dine—far from it! His friends having seen nothing of him for some days, begin to ask each other what has become of him. "I hear he is laid up with an attack of indigestion." "Ah, of tooth picks?"

A Pastor's Enthusiasm.

H. H. Warner & Co: Sirs—Mrs. Bardwell has been a long sufferer from chronic inflamation of the bladder, which yielded to no treatment until she began the use of your Safe Kidney and Liver Cure. We recommend the remedy at all times.

Rev. D. McGee Bardwell.

Two ladies exchanging notes on the method in which they spend the day. "You see, I always get up at 10 and ring for my maid and get dressed." "How long does that take?" "Oh, ever so long. You see, the girl takes a full hour to do my hair." "A full hour? Mercy! What do you do while she is fixing it?" "I go out in the garden and take my morning walk."

For dyspepsia, indigestion, depression of spirits and general debility, in their various forms; also as a preventive against fever and ague and other intermittent fevers, the "Ferro-Phosphorated Elixir of Calisaya," made by Caswell, Hazard & Co, New York, sold by all Druggists, is the best tonic; and for patients recovering from fever or other sickness, it has no equal.

Fogg has a neat way of returning a compliment now and then. Seeing the elderly Miss Pangley in the street the other day he tried to avoid her, but he did not succeed. When they met, said Miss Pangley; "Oh, you naughty man! You wanted to cut me." "I should be cutting a pretty figure, wouldn't I?" Miss Pangley tells her friend Miss Sagergreen that Mr. Fogg is a perfect gentleman.

The market is flooded with worthless and vile compounds for the rejuveanation of the hair, but Carboline, the great hair renewer, and dressing, as now improved and perfected, still takes the front rank as the best preparation ever offered to the public.

A young man who went to the circus and stepped too near the monkey's cage had his arm seized and savagely jerked by one of the monkeys. He would have escaped safely if he had not said; "It's merely a monkey-wrench," but when they heard that the infurated crowd threw him into the lion's den.

A man in Green Bay, Wisconsin, sent a pair of trowers to a friend who had a part in private theatricals, with the message, "Loaned for the part you are about to play." He entrusted to the same messenger a piece of silver ware designated as a wedding gift to a young lady about to be married. The messenger gave her the wrong parcel.

Ladies if you would be forever redeemed from the physical disabilities that, in thousands of cases, depress the spirits and absolutely fetter all the energies of womanhood, you have only to get Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound.

A German actor, anxious to secure applause and unable to pay for a claque, secured places in the gallery for his nine children and instructed them carefully as to the moment when they should clap their hands and shout "Bravo!" The moment arrived at last, and to his amazement a chorus of nine called out: "Bravo, papa, bravo."

Decline of Man.

"Look here," said an indignant Austin tenant to the landlord, "there is a cat in the cistern of that house you rented to me." "Is it dead?" "It looks like it." "Then it will not disturb you any at night, so I will have to raise your rent five dollars on that account."

There are plenty of parents that give their children "Lindsey's Blood Searcher" before each meal, and they are healthy.

"A loft to let" is painted on a board suspended on the door of a Gold street store. "Why don't you spell those words properly?" a customer asked the proprietor. "Because if we did no one would turn to read them. That extra "t" catches the eye."

"Listen, Auntie; what's that?" "It's the cuckoo, darling. Don't you know the cuckoo?" "Oh, yes! The cuckoo's that horrid bird that doesn't lay its own eggs."

It was lately observed by Herr Kepner, at Salzburg, in the Tyrol, that some old bricks had an attractive or repellant force on a compass. From each of eight varieties of clay in the neighborhood two bricks were moulded, and one of the two in each case was baked. The unbaked bricks had no action on a magnetic needle, but seven of the eight baked bricks proved polarly magnetic. Some further experiments have been made by Herren Kell and Trientl. Particles of powder of the magnetic bricks adhered to a steel magnet. Breunerite, mica-slate, argillaceous iron-garnet, chlorite and hornblende were, before heating, unmagnetic, but intense heating produced a magnetic polarity, the axis of which seemed to be perpendicular to the plane of stratification.

Terrible Sufferings.

Dr. R. V. Pierce, Buffalo, N. Y.:—I have a friend who suffered terribly. I purchased a bottle of your "Favorite Prescription," and, as a result of its use, she is perfectly well. J. BAILEY, Burdett, New York.

Dr. Pierce's "Golden Medical Discovery" and "Pleasant Purgative Pellets" purify the blood and cure constipation.

A little girl, who had been to church two or three times, was asked the other Sunday what the minister had said. "He told about God and Heaven." And did he say anything else?" "Yes, he said there would be a torchlight procession in the afternoon." The notice had been given that a collection would be taken in the afternoon.

Dr. R. V. Pierce, Buffalo, N. Y.: Dear Sir—For many months I was a great sufferer. Physicians could afford me no relief. In my despair I commenced the use of your "Favorite Prescription" It speedily effected my entire and permanent cure. Yours thankfully,
Mrs. PAUL R. BAXTER, Iowa City, Ia.

"Lay off your overcoat, or you won't feel it when you get out," said the landlord of a Western Inn to a guest who was sitting by the fire. "That's what I am afraid of," returned the man. Preparing for the future state: "Ah, my friend," said a clergyman to a parishioner who was the husband of a termagant and who had made application for a divorce, "we should be yielding and forgiving. An Old Doctor's Advice.

It was this: "Trust in God and keep your bowels open." For this purpose many an old doctor has advised the habitually costive to take Kidney-Wort—for no other remedy so effectually overcomes this condition, and that without the distress and griping which other medicines cause. It is a radical cure for piles. Don't fail to use it.—Translated from the New Yorker Zeitung.

Senatorial repartee: Some years ago Senator Conkling had interrupted Senator Edmunds in a speech on civil service reform with the supercilious remark that the Senator from Vermont was fighting a wind-mill. "Certainly," replied Mr. Edmunds, "the Senator from New York!"

Liver Kidney and Bright's Disease.

A medicine that destroys the germ or cause of Bright's Disease, Diabetes, Kidney and Liver Complaints, and has power to root them out of the system, is above all price. Such a medicine is Hop bitters, and positive proof of this can be found by one trial, or by asking your neighbors, who have been cured by it.

Distance in hock beer time: "About how far is it, sir, to 'Squire Bigmun's?" asked a gentleman of a dubious-looking individual. "Let's see: it's about three blocks and two saloons from here. Not much of a walk if you don't stop often." His information was based on his own knowledge.

Harassing Dreams.—An unnatural excitement of the brain and nervous system is the direct cause of sleeplessness, as also of harassing nocturnal dreams. Vegetine has a peculiarly soothing effect in all such cases, when taken just before going to bed.

Denominational: "Yes, I've got a horrid cold," said Mrs. Jerkinson. "I've dosed and dosed and I don't get one bit better. 'Pon my word I believe I've taken no less than thirty-nine articles and I begin to feel like an Episcopalian."

Every one of our lady readers should send five three cent stamps for a copy of Strawbridge & Clothier's Quarterly, one of the largest fashion magazines published. The present number contains 120 large pages, with 1000 engravings, illustrating the new fashions and four pages of new music. Strawbridge & Clothier, 8th and Market streets, Philadelphia.

A bright fellow: "Charley is a bright fellow," remarked Brown, "his wit is always brilliant and he always says the right thing at the right time. A witty fellow is Charley." "Yes," replied Fogg, "Charley has a fine memory."

American statesmanship: "Yes," said the country member, "I went to that variety show because I felt sure there'd be nobody there who knew me! Durned if pretty much the whole Legislature wasn't there!"

Journalistic; A Missouri paragrapher heads his column, "Tacks," and the managing editor sits down on it.

Hard Sauce.—Four ounces of butter, five ounces of sugar, beaten to a cream; pile it on the dish. You can add a scraped nutmeg or a little lemon juice when beating it, as you like—not enough to thin it, only to flavor.

Dr. Kline's Great Nerve Restorer is the marvel of the age for all nerve diseases. All fits stopped free. Send to 931 Arch Street, Philadelphia, Pa.

Substitute for Cream.—Beat the white of an egg to a froth, and mix well in a very small lump of butter. Add to it any hot liquid granually, so that it may not curdle.

Cocoanut Candy.—Two cups granulated sugar, (7 cents;) half-cup water: boil for six minutes; add one grated cocoanut (9 cent;) as soon as the sugar is soft spread in white greased paper, and when cold squeeze, 16 cents for one pound.

$You Can Make $1000 Speedily. Any one who takes an agency now can speedily make $100, and $agents at work, but the following extracts show the great value of the business, and are fair samples of many re$ports received from our agents. An agent in the State of New York writes:—"Yesterday I secured a very large $number of subscribers; my profits for the day's work figure up to over $50." A lady agent at work in the State of New $ourl, writes:—"In one week I have made nearly $150, taking subscribers for your paper. I secure a subscriber so$almost every house." An agent at work in Canada, writes:—"The first ten days I was out, I made over $200. I am ex$totalled at my own success." Letters making similar statements are constantly coming to us. All who engage $make money much faster than agents were ever known to make it before. Any one can be a successful agent $No one can fail to make great pay. True & Co., publishers, have always been in the front, and now make by far the $greatest offer ever put before the American people. It is not at all uncommon for those who work at this business to $make over $20 a day. Agents Wanted for the well-known, great family publication, The Illustrated Family Herald, $a publication monthly, by True & Co., Augusta, Maine. Terms $1 a year. The Herald is the largest and most elegantly $illustrated family publication in America, and whoever says anything to the contrary makes statements that are not $true; each number contains 24 large pages, 96 long columns. All ever heretofore thought of outdone and far surpassed. 12 Beautiful and Elegant Chromos Given Free to Each Subscriber. Each of these chromos is worth $ten of the ordinary pictures that are given to subscribers. As beautiful works of high art, these chromos far surpass $all agents ever before presented to the subscribers for any publication. An Extraordinary Offer. We want to $pictures ever before presented to the subscribers for any publication. An Extraordinary Offer. We want to $Herald 3 months free to all who now subscribe, or those men who in all for only $1; this great offer induces people to $subscribe at once, and taken together with the immense standard publication, and the 12 beautiful and valuable pre$mium chromos, enables agents to secure a subscriber at almost every house they visit. Our Private Terms to Agents $we send to those who order Outfits; it would not be best to publish our terms here; our terms are most liberal, and $enable all who take agencies to make money faster than ever they expected to at any business. Don't Delay $Outfit. The largest, most magnificent, and expensive Outfit ever placed in the hands of agents by any publishers. It $consists of the 12 premium chromos, sample copies of the Herald, a large circular, explaining in detail all about the $business, and giving private terms to agents, blank subscription lists, instructions for working in the most successful $manner, and a certificate of agency showing that you are appointed by us as agent. This large, expensive Outfit is $free, but in a measure to guard against unprincipled persons ordering it, who do not mean business, we require $that 25 cents be sent when the Outfit is ordered, which barely pays for the packing and postage alone; the Outfit itself is $furnish free. As a further safeguard, we require every person who orders an Outfit to send us a copy of the following $letter:—True & Co. Send me at once the agent's new Outfit. I faithfully promise and assure you that I order this $Outfit for the purpose of going to work at the business and not in order to get it free by just paying the postage and $cost of packing. Inclosed I send 25 cents. Name———. Post-office address———. County———. State———. We $take postage stamps, and it is better to send them than to put silver in a letter. We guarantee the safe delivery in $good condition of every Outfit that is ordered. The mails are very trustworthy, and it is best to send small sums by $money in a common letter. If we have more applications for agencies from any locality than we need to do business with, $the money sent for postage and packing on Outfits is returned at once, and the Outfits are of course not sent. We will $return the 25 cents sent for postage and packing to any person who, on receiving the Outfit, is not entirely satisfied with it in $all respects, or who, on trying the business, is not fully satisfied. No one fails—all are more than satisfied. How $Agents Conduct the Business. The agent having ordered and received an Outfit goes around from house to house $showing the mammoth illustrated paper and elegant premium chromos; he explains that those who subscribe now $paying only $1, will receive the paper for fifteen months, and all 12 of the chromos free. When one is secured, or as often $as the agent may think best, the names of the subscribers secured are forwarded to us; as soon as a list of subscribers $is received, we forward to the agent the full set of 12 premium chromos for each subscriber, and a receipt for each $remitting him or her to the paper for fifteen months. We then commence to send the papers to subscribers and $send continue regularly for fifteen months. When the agent receives the chromos he goes around and delivers them $to the subscribers, collecting $1 from each; thus it will be seen that all connected with the business is perfectly plain $and easy. We guarantee the safe delivery in good condition of all that is ordered; if any thing is lost or damaged $while passing through the mail we are always ready to fill the order over again at our own expense. THE GOLD OF HOPE.

Bright shines the sun; but brighter after rain;
The clouds that darken make the sky more clear;
So rest is sweeter when it follows pain,
And the sad parting makes our friends more dear.

'Tis well it should be thus; our Father knows
The things that work together for our good;
We draw a sweetness from our bitter woes—
We would not have all sunshine if we could.

The days, with all their beauty and their light,
Come from the dark, and into dark return;
Day speaks of earth, but heaven shines through the night,
Where in the blue a thousand star-fires burn.

So runs the law, the law of recompense,
That binds our life on earth and heaven in one;
Faith cannot live when all is sight and sense,
But Faith can live and sing when these are gone.

We grieve and murmur for we can but see
The single thread that flies in silence by;
When if we only saw the things to be,
Our lips would breath a song, not sigh.

Wait, then, my soul, and edge the darkening cloud
With the bright gold that hope can always lend;
And if to-day thou art with sorrow bowed,
Wait till to-morrow, and thy grief shall end.

And when we reach the limit of our days,
Beyond the reach of shadows and of night,
Then shall our every look and voice be praise
To Him who shines, our everlasting light.

NEARLY A MISTAKE.

Better be an old man's darling than a young man's slave."

This had been Jessie Vernon's constant laughing answer to the many questions heaped upon her as to her strange choice—strange only because James Usilton had been a man of twenty-five when Jessie's violet eyes first had opened upon the world.

She was nineteen now, and he a man of forty-four.

An old man's darling indeed,
His darling, yes; but in the light of an old man, a hundred times no!

The wonder lay that he should have stooped from his grand height to her.

But he smiled sadly when he listened to her repetition of these things.

"I don't think you quite realize the gulf of years between us," he would answer her. "Think, Jessie—in six more years I shall be fifty, and you will scarce be twenty-five. Are you sure, darling—sure you will never regret?"

Once, when he had said to her something like this she burst into tears.

"Hush, hush!" she entreated. "You speak as though the heart might grow old. As long, James, as I do not seem too frivolous a child to be honored by your love, never again wound me by a doubt."

The words sank deep into his heart.

In future years he had sore need to find comfort in their memory.

The wedding-day at last dawned clear and bright.

He vowed, as he uttered the solemn pledges at the altar, that at any sacrifice he would make her happiness.

It was a silent vow, but none the less sacred.

Two years passed on.

He would have held time back in the new joy of his experience.

Their boy was not a fortnight old when he entered his wife's room with an open letter in his hand.

She was resting in a large arm-chair, the violet eyes bent downward with new beauty in their depth to scan the little face pillowed on her breast.

"See, little mother," he cried, "I have just heard from Carl. He is coming home. He will be with us almost any day."

"Oh, I shall be glad to know him," she replied; "but jealous, James—a little jealous, I fear—you love him so well."

"As well as though he were my son," he answered fondly. "No—no! I used to say that, but I know now differently. It will be for him to feel jealous, my darling, not for you. He will find two usurpers in the place he used to fill."

And he stooped to kiss the two faces, between which he liked to trace the strange likeness.

Carl Howard had grown to Jessie almost to be a household word.

He was her husband's ward—the son of a friend who had been to him dearer than a brother, and who, dying, had constituted him sole guardian of his only child.

The young man had just commenced his college career when his father died.

After finishing it he had gone abroad, and it had now been six years since his leaving his native land.

To Jessie he seemed still a boy, for as such James spoke of him.

Unconsciously, now that he was coming home, she found herself devising schemes for his amusement.

He might find their country home dull, beautiful as it was in its June dress, she mused.

Perhaps, now that she had grown strong and well again, she might invite a gay party of young people to fill it.

But before she had time to put any of her plans into execution, Carl arrived.

She and James were sitting together on the piazza, when a carriage drove hastily up, and out from it sprang a young man, tall, broad-shouldered, and even in the dim twilight, unmistakably handsome.

James started up to meet him, taking both outstretched hands in his in a way which showed how genuine was his welcome.

Then he led him proudly to his wife.

"Jessie, this is Carl."

"Why, uncle,"—this was the title he had always given him since his childhood—"I thought this was some little girl visiting you!"

And truly, in her white wrapper, buried in a great arm chair, Jessie looked but a child.

All three laughed merrily.

The ice was broken—Carl was one of them.

Looking back at that hour, as the weeks sped on, how strange it seemed to look beyond.

Before Carl came seemed almost a blank, so did his young life fill the place.

Jessie never had had a brother; but she felt this gap in her life was filled now.

She and Carl were sworn friends.

It was he who rode with her when James cared not to go—who walked with her when James was busy—who stood ready at all times to be her humble and devoted cavalier.

She had expected a mere boy; she found a travelled man of the world, full ten years her senior.

When she told him her plan to fill the house, he would not listen to it.

"Let us be alone," he pleaded; and she was but too willing to give assent.

It was a joyous summer.

They allowed no sovereignty save baby.

Over all three, he held undisputed sway.

"You have made my uncle young again," Carl said to her, one day.

"Hush!" she replied. That is treason. We cannot make him what he already is, or return to him what he has never lost."

"You are happy?" James would sometimes say to her, yearningly—"quite happy?" as though he dared not believe in the sunny brightness of his life.

"Jessie," Carl began once, as they sat alone together, "I am going to confide to you a secret no one knows as yet, not even my uncle. I am in love. I have been fighting against it myself for long. In my wandering life I have grown sceptical as to married happiness. What I have seen here has renewed my confidence, and I intend to put my fate to the test, and if I am fortunate, next summer I shall bring my bride here. Will you open your heart to her too?"

"Indeed—indeed I will," she answered earnestly.

And from that hour a new tie bound them.

"Why do you not tell Jame!" she would often ask him.

But he always answered:

"Wait."

Once he came to her with a letter in his hand, his handsome face alight with joy.

"It is all right, Jessie," he cried out. "Oh, can I tell you how proud and glad I am? And it is to you I owe it. It is you who taught me the power of love—what it is, what it may do; you who have given me this happiness I might never else have tasted. Jessie—Jessie! why did I not meet you earlier?"

"Oh, Carl, you can never love as I do!" she answered, when something sounded through the room as she uttered the last word.

Both glanced up.

The master of the house stood in the doorway, white and stern, but with an awful sorrow in his kind eyes.

Jessie sprang to his side.

"What is it, darling? What has happened?"

Could it be that she did not know he had overheard Carl's last words to her? he wondered.

Could it be that she had grown so accustomed to their meaning that she could not comprehend the awful vista they opened before his hitherto blinded eyes?

Could it be that she was so versed in deception that she could so readily call up the old love-light in the sweet face, where he had thought to read the content he had given her?"

"It is nothing," he said hoarsely and turned away.

Something in his manner hurt and chilled her, but when they had next met it had gone.

He was more watchful, more tender—that was all.

Of the long dark hours he had passed she could dream nothing.

"I strove to make her happiness," he would repeat softly to himself, "at any cost—at any cost. And it is still all my fault; I threw them together. How well they are suited to each other. With each of them life is just beginning; with me—oh Heaven—I would that it had ended 'ere I lived to see this hour. But how can I make her happiness—my darling's happiness? I will find a way, and Heaven will forgive the sin."

Three days passed.

What had happened to her husband?

Once Jessie found his eyes fixed on her face as though they would pierce their way into her soul

"I believe James suspects we have a secret" she said to Carl one day. "Will you not let me tell him of your happiness?"

"Yes, you may tell him now," he answered. "He will understand why I give you my confidence, even before him."

In the twilight she knocked at the library door.

There was no answer, and she opened it softly and went in.

A letter lay on the table, addressed to herself.

She tore it open, and with blanched face and wide staring eyes, read the written page.

He wrote—

"Good-by, my darling. I have found out (how matters not) that you and Carl love each other. I do not blame you. No momentary doubt of your womanly truth and purity has crossed my mind, but I swore to give you happiness at any cost, and I go to keep my oath. If ere long news of my sudden accidental death comes to you, you will know that I did not count the cost lightly, and remember that I died blessing you, and that it is my wish you and Carl should find with each other the happiness you missed with me. I could not hope, darling, to blend your young life with mine, yet the dream while it lasted was full of sweetness. Perhaps Heaven will give it back to me in eternity."

Like a spectre she hastened back to the room she had left, and thrust the letter, on which the ink was hardly dry, into Carl Howard's hands.

"Find him," she moaned, "find him. Bring him back to me, or never let me look again upon your face."

Then with a shrill scream from the young lips, as the full extent of her misery burst upon her, she fell fainting to the floor.

For hours she was unconscious; but when at last the violet eyes opened they looked into her husband's face.

Carl had found and brought him back to her.

With a few hasty words all had been explained.

Through an accident of time the dread verdict "Too late" had not been pronounced.

The handsome face bending over her pillow was aged with misery, but to her it had the light of eternal youth.

She heeded not his passionate prayer for forgiveness.

She forgot that he had wronged her; only, with her clinging arms about his neck she drew him down—down to the sacred shelter of her breast.

The World's End.

The belief that the world would come to an end in the year 1600 was associated with, if not absolutely derived from, a much older belief entertained by the earliest astronomers of whom any records remain to us. They considered that certain cyclic periods of the planetary motions begin and end with terrestial calamities, these calamities being of different characters according to the zodiacal relations of the planetary conjunctions. Thus the ancient Chaldeans taught (according to Diodorus Siculus) that when all the planets are conjoined in Capricornus the earth is destroyed by flood; when they are all conjoined in Cancer the earth is destroyed by fire. But after each such end comes the beginning of a new cycle, at which time all things are created afresh. A favorite doctrine respecting these cyclic destructions was that the period intervening between each was the Annus Magnus, or great year required for the return of the then known planets to the position (of conjunction) which they were understood to have had at the beginning of the great year. According to some this period lasted 360,000 years; other assigned to it 300,000 years, while according to Orpheus it lasted 120,000 years. But it was in every case a multiple of a thousand years, and the subordinate catastrophes were supposed to divide the great year into sets of so many thousand years.

An Indian Home.

The house is situated in a natural locust grove, on the Cherokee nation, such as sprinkle the beautiful prairie to which their presence gives a name. It stands on a slight elevation in the midst of yard, garden, farm-steading and field. It is not of logs, as is most common, but is what in the west is called a "frame house," and is built of sawed lumber from a neighboring mill. Like all houses in a mild climate that invites to spend so much life out of doors, it has an ample piazza, furnished with split or hide-bottomed chairs, and containing a fixture for a hand basin and towel.

The yard is decorated with native and cultivated flowers, rose trees in large growth and of luxuriant bloom, and honeysuckle wearing an odoriferous mantle of blossoms. Within the house is comfortably furnished with antique bedsteads and cases of drawers that are evidently heirlooms, and perhaps came to the country with the emigration of the Cherokee people. Two ancient oil painting ornamented the walls—the father and mother of our hostess—taken in old age by some artist who visited the country, and representing in both instances striking countenances, having been the captain of a Cherokee company that fought the hostile Creeks at the battle of the Horse Shoe under Andrew Jackson. Tin-types portraits of our host and hostess and the heir of the family, a bright boy now at school at the male seminary at Tahlequah, complete the picture gallery. A few books and a number of newspapers furnish the reading matter. Everything is neat and clean, showing the presence of a notable housewife.

POVERTY is hard, but debt is horrible; a man might as well have a smoky house and scolding wife which are said to be the two worst evils of our life.

ROUMANIA excels all other countries in Europe in the production of Indian corn. The average yield is thirty-four bushels per acre, the total crop aggregating about 108,000,000 bushels.

The World's Champion Oarsman.

Ever since Edward Hanlan first appeared in his shell, winning races over all comers, his style has been the subject of criticism and attempted description by watermen and newspaper writers. To the writer who has watched the champion in practice and races, no writer seems to have as fully mastered the reason for his success like a recent critic in the London Sportsman. In the first place he states that Hanlan has improved greatly in the past two years. He appears to have "filled out" slightly; his muscles, as in common with men of his age, have hardened and acquired more power and his style of propelling a racing craft has, if anything become more beautifully perfect. The reasons assigned for Hanlan's progress are that he has tried every improvement in boats, fittings and sculls, has brought intelligence to bear upon the subject of sculling, and has taken wonderful care of himself. He is discreet in the selection of his food, but has stepped outside of cherished traditions. He is no advocate for the consumption of half raw chops or badly underdone cutlets, which was once supposed to be so strengthening, nor does he entirely refrain from light puddings or other little delicacies to vary the daily menu. He recognizes the theory that the absorption of fluids rather than the consumption of solids prevents the frame from being relieved of superfluous flesh. While he does not wholly abstain from intoxicants, he has always been a temperate man. Before Hanlan will consent to start in a race he must know by actual trial that his boat is in harmony with himself. He adjusts the boat to his action not his action to the boat. But the best part of the criticism relates to his stroke. As it displays a thorough understanding of the art of rowing and describes a stroke which has been phenomenally successful, we give it at length for the benefit of our aquatic friends. The sportsman says, "Hanlan is careful to drop his sculls in a cleanly and neat style into the water, not dipping too deep, but merely exercising caution that the blades shall be well covered. His chief strength is exerted when the sculls are at perfect right angles with the boat; he pulls his stroke through with an even exertion of strength and invariably finishes with a powerful "wrench," if that word is appropriate. It should be noticed that he never concludes his slide until he has completed his stroke. Thus the muscles of the arms, shoulders, back and legs work in perfect harmony. When he has finished with a vigorous effort he whips his sculls out of the water like lightning, and under the influence of his final "thrust" the boat is naturally progressing until he gets to work again. We have seen scores of oarsmen who put their full power into the initial effort and closed very languidly. The mere fact of their allowing the sculls the drag in the water even for an instant must necessarily deprive the light shell of some of its "way," and thus we have that jerky style of progressing but too commonly noticeable. We shall not be wrong if we say Hanlan finishes up quite as strongly as he begins his stroke, and we really believe if some of our representatives will perseveringly endeavor to adopt this method they may be gratified with the result."

Domestic Comforts.

Among the recently granted patents is one for the cooling of dwelling houses offices, hotels, etc., by means of compressed gas, which is conducted from a street main into the premises in pipes like ordinary gas. The compressed gas on being allowed to expand within a suitable receptacle, produces a very low temperature. Thus the housekeeper, simply by turning the gas faucet, will be able to make ice, supply the dwelling in hot weather with cold air, and produce all forms and degrees of refrigerations with the utmost facility. Our houses being now supplied from street mains with cold water, hot water, compressed gas, and electricity, we now only need, to complete the comforts of living, a milk main and tea and coffee mains: after which perhaps the public will call for soup pipes.

Washington's Log Cabin.

The log cabin which Washington made his headquarters when a surveyor in the valley of Virginia still stands intact over the spring at Soldier's Rest, Clarke County. Soldier's Rest was built by General Daniel Morgan, of Revolutionary fame. When bruised and, bloody from the numerous fights with which he was wont to celebrate Court day in the neighboring town of Berryville, he would retire to the old spring house, where his wife would bathe his head and bind up his wounds. The cabin is now used as a dairy.

The Journey of the Bell.

The journey into London of Great Paul, the new and monster bell designed for St. Paul's Cathedral, was attended with many difficulties, some of them great. Several times the road gave way beneath the weight, until the truck became half buried in the earth. Wherever the road was soft the wheels, though very broad, would sink into the soil, so that on a certain day only about fifty yards of the journey was traversed.

Fuller Particulars.

The reporter saw two horses dashing down a street in Salt Lake City with a few pieces of the harness left and also a portion of the running gear of the carriage. He made directly for the spot where the horses had left the carriage, and by following the track of spokes, hubs, and fragments of the carriage soon reached the wreck. There was a man standing by looking at it with some interest.

"How'd this happen?" asked the scribe.

"Dam fino," rejoined the man. "Horse kind of runaway, I guess."

"Can you give me any particulars?"

"Well, no, I did not see the first of it. Guess didn't amount to anything anyhow. Got scared at somethin, I s'pose."

"Anybody hurt?"

"Well now, stranger, I couldn't say. 'Pears to me somebody did mention it, but I forgot now who 'twas. Ain't much acquainted in the ward anyhow."

"Do you know anybody that does know?"

"Guess the horses got skeered somehow."

The reporter calls on eight or ten eye-witnesses of the scene and none have sufficient intelligence to give any account of the accident, which happened right under their noses. All seem to labor under the impression that they will be arrested and sentenced to ten years' hard labor in the Penitentiary if they impart a single scrap of information. Inside of ten minutes the man first interviewed reaches home and his memory begins to liven up. He tells his wife all about it.

—"I tell you, Sal, I never saw auch an all fired runaway as I saw just a while ago. Billy Brown's two-horse team ran away, threw Mrs. Brown and two children out and knocked old Brown senseless. I was right there and helped to carry him over to Thompson's. The buggy struck a tree and smashed the daylights out of it. Guess Brown will die. They say his leg was broke, left leg, just below the knee, and Mrs. Brown's jaw was smashed. The children, Betsy and Clara, wasn't hurt so much."

"I suppose it'll be in a paper in the morning."

"Bet you don't see a line there; reporters are too cussed lazy to hunt an item anyhow, and then they never get it right."

In the morning the man looks in his paper and cusses it for not giving fuller particulars.

I'm Her Husband.

Once, when Mme. Rentz and her famale minstrels were performing in San Francisco, a well-known Front-street merchant—one of the front-orchestra-seat brigade, whose head was more clear than level—waited around the stage entrance to the Standard Theater after the performance trying to conceal a handsome bouquet under his ulster.

For a long time he kept peering at the different specimens of Mme. Rentz's sirens, as they put up their umbrellas and trotted away in the rain. After waiting patiently for about an hour, he approached an individual with a red scarf and a slouched hat who stood smoking a cigar at the entrance, and said:

"Can you tell me, sir, if Miss Chlorine has gone home yet?"

"Oh, yes, been gone half an hour," replied the slouch hat party cheerfully. Those flowers for her?"

"Well—er—um—yes."

"I'll give 'em to her—see her later," said the obliging man.

"Will you? That's very kind surely."

"Oh, not at all," said the man, smelling the bouquet with the air of a connoisseur. "Anything else?"

"Well—ahem!—yes. Just give her this pair of ear-rings."

"Certainly. What name shall I say?"

"Just say that 'Baby Mine'—she'll understand—sends love, and says 2.30 at the same place to-morrow."

"I'll just make a mem. of that," said the red-tie man, writing on his shirt-cuff, "2.30, same place to-morrow. All right. Anything else?"

"No, that's all. Sure you'll see her this evening."

"Oh, certain."

"And you'll get a chance to speak to her when there is no one around?"

"Oh, dead sure. You see, I'm her husband!"

"Baby Mine" fainted, and was sent to his home in a hack.

A Masher.

Just before a Western-bound train left the Union depot, a masher with his little grip-sack slid around to a woman standing near the ticket office and remarked;

"Excuse me, but can I be of any assistance in purchasing your ticket?"

"No, sir!" was the short reply.

"Beg pardon, but I shall be glad to see that your trunk is properly checked," he continued.

"It has been checked, sir."

"Yes—ahem—you go West, I presume?"

"I do."

"Going as far as Chicago?"

"Yes, sir."

"Ah—yes—to Chicago. I also take the train for Chicago. Beg your pardon, but did't I meet you in Buffalo last fall?"

"No, sir!"

"Ah! Then it was in Syracuse?"

"No, sir!"

"No? I wonder where I have seen you before!"

"You saw me enter the depot about five minutes ago with my husband, I presume!"

"Your husband?"

"Yes, sir, and if you'll only stay around here three minutes longer you'll make the fifth fellow o your kind that he has turned over to the coroner this month!"

Some masher would have made a run for it, but this one didn't. He went off on the gallop, and as he wanted to go light he left his grip-sack and a ton of brass behind him.

Mad Doctors.

A few days ago an elegantly dressed lady called on one of the best known mad doctors in Paris, and in a voice broken with sobs exclaimed; "Doctor, you are my only hope now. My poor son is a monomaniac; he is quite harmless: his idee fixe is that he is a cashier in bank, and to everybody he meets he presents a bill or account and demands payment. He has already got himself and me into serious difficulties, and I don't know what to do." And here the tears began to course each other down the fair pleader's cheeks. The doctor did his best to cheer the unhappy mother, asked her various questions, and finally gave some hope of curing the boy. She dried her tears, and said she would leave her son in his hands. "I will bring him to you to-morrow; but oh! doctor, the separation will be cruel," Next morning she appeared with the boy. "Tell your master," she said to the servant who opened the door, "that the person he expects is here," and, taking a parcel from her son's hands, told him to wait a few minutes. She then retired by a side entrance which the doctor had shown her, and had advised her to pass in order to avoid a mournful, and, perhaps, exciting farewell with her son. Quarter of an hour passed, the Doctor entered the waiting room, and the young man presented his account. "Quite right, my lad, I will settle it with you directly," and he felt the young men's pulse. "Normal pulse" says the man of science. "My account," says the young man. "my master will be uneasy; please give me the money at once." But the doctor gazed fixedly at him, and tried to feel his pulse. "Let go!" exclaimed the monomaniac, getting into a passion. "Pay me at once, and don't make a fool of yourself."

"Violent attack," says the doctor calmly, and he pulled the bell rope rather violently. "The shower bath," he explained to his two attendants; and in a twinkle the young man was stripped, and a stream of ice-cold water pouring over him.

He howled, he kicked, but uselessly. When the doctor came to see the effect of the operation, he was much surprised to find his patient madder than ever; vowing vengeance at one moment, and the next imploring his torturers to send to a jeweler in the Rue de la Paix and ask him to come and release him. When the doctor heard the word "jeweler" a light broke upon him. He dispatched an attendant to the Rue de la Paix, and in a few minutes the jeweler appeared upon the scene. He turned somewhat pale when matters were explained to him, for he saw himself robbed of 25,000 francs by a most ingenious chevallier d'industrie. She had chosen jewelry to that amount, but not having the money with her she had said; Let your clerk come with me; I live in the Avenue d'Evlau, and my husband will pay the account."

The Size of It.

A citizen had had occasion to consult a lawyer regarding a suit which he contemplated instituting, but of the definite outcome of which he was in doubt. He did not wish to pay a retaining fee, because he was uncertain of winning. The attorney said he would accept a contingent fee. The party met Mr. Burleigh some time afterward and asked him the definition of a contingent fee.

"A contingent fee," jocosely said Mr Burleigh, is this: "If a lawyer loses the case he gets nothing. If he wins you get nothing."

"But," said the perplexed party, scratching his head, "I can't say that I exactly comprehend you."

"I thought I was quite clear," said Mr. Burleigh, who repeated what he had said.

"But it seems that I don't get anything in either event," said the man, when his intellect had fully grasped the situation.

"Well, that is about the size of a contingent fee." replied Mr. Burleigh, terminating the conversation.

A Sponge Bath.

It was not in McFadden's drug store that a young and sprightly school teacher last week addressed the clerk:

"I would like a sponge bath."

"Ah, oh, a—will you please repeat, I did not quite understand you?" stammered the clerk.

"I would like a good sponge bath," again demanded the customer, while a pair of sharp gray eyes, beaming with wonder and impatience, made him tremble.

More dead than alive he managed to tell his fair visitor his inability to catch her meaning.

"Well, I never! If this isn't queer! I think I speak intelligently enough. I—want—you—to—give—me—a—good—sponge—bath."

At this moment the proprietor whispered:

"She wants a bath sponge."

At the same moment she comprehended the trouble and fled from the store before she could be recognized by any one, but too late! A gentleman raised his hat to her, passed in and all was discovered.

He who frets is never the one who mends, heals, who repairs evils; more he discourages, enfeebles, and too often disables those around him, who, but for the gloom and the depression of his company, would do good work and keep up brave cheer. And when the fretter is one who is beloved, whose nearness of relation to us makes his fretting even at the weather seem almost like a personal reproach to us, then the misery of it becomes indeed insupportable.

Congressional Convention.

A convention of the Democratic and Conservative party of the Seventh Congressional District is hereby called to meet in Gadsden on the 10th day of of August, 1882, at 12 o'clock M., for the purpose of nominating a candidate to represent said District in the 48th Congress. JOHN H DISQUE,
Chairman Congressional Ex. Com.

The political pot is boiling quite lively in Etowah county. The people of surrounding counties are watching the contest between the organized Democracy and the Independents with great interest, and taking note of the attitude of the leaders of public opinion in that county.

Public Speaking Last Saturday.

Friday evening Gen. O'Neal, Democratic candidate for Governor, arrived in Jacksonville and became the guest of Hon. James Crook. Saturday Treasurer Ike H. Vincent arrived.

By 10 o'clock Saturday many people, from all parts of the county, were gathered here to hear the distinguished gentlemen speak. Promptly at the advertised hour the Court house bell was rung, and in a few moments the court room was filled to its utmost capacity.

Mr. Vincent was first introduced by Hon. J. H. Caldwell in a most happy manner, and for half an hour or more interested the audience very deeply in a talk on the finances of the State, the amount of taxes collected and what was done with the money. He showed most conclusively that the Democratic party had redeemed every pledge it made in 1874 to give the people a cheap and honestly administered government. His speech was listened to with profound attention and gave great satisfaction.

Col. Caldwell introduced next Gen O'Neal, in a way, that for its eloquence, not only touched and effected our standard bearer, but roused the audience to a high degree of enthusiasm. It was a telling campaign speech in itself. In the course of it, he related an incident of the battle of Gettysburg, in which Gen. O'Neal bore a distinguished part, and most happily applied it. A Colonel of the Brigade that Gen. O'Neal was coming exclaimed to his men on the verge of battle. "Boys we have the Eleventh Corps to run over to day." The General heard him, and while the fine fire of battle shone in his dauntless eye, exclaimed "Yes. We will not only run over the eleventh corps, but we will run over all of them." "And so it will be in this civil contest", said Col Caldwell. Under the leadership of the gallant standard bearer, we will not only run over the Republican party, but we will run over all of them—Radicals, Independents, and Greenbackers all.

Gen. O'Neal, after going over some of the ground covered by the speech of Mr. Vincent, and finely contrasting the records of the Radical and Democratic party in the administration of our State Government, carried his audience back to the inaugnration of the reconstruction measures, and refreshed their memories as to the unparelled outrages heaped upon the people of this State, by the Republican party; the party that now has the effrontery to again advance a claim to administer State affairs, and which invites honest white men who have acted with the Independents, and Greenbackers to join it in the unholy crusade. He went away back of all this, also, and starting from the early struggles of the fathers for a Repuplican form of Government and a heritage of freedom to their children, he followed the splendid career of the Democratic party though its more than sixty years of power, in a speech that far sustained eloquence and power has been rarely equalled in our court house. It was a real old fashioned Democratic speech, which pleased all who heard it, and which will do great good. It will inspire the party here and bring it to a closer organization; it will deter weak Democrats from running off after strange gods; it will bring back to the Democratic camp many stragglers. We already begin to see the effect of it in this direction. We regret that every Democrat in the county did not hear it. It was just such a speech as was needed here, Since the Radical party in Alabama hid its deformed head some years ago and apparently disbanded, the Democratic press has had little to say of it. Our people were likely to forget its horrible and dishonorable career in Alabama during the dark days of reconstruction when the "fools and theives" held power. It was fitting now, when this monster again tries to creep nation with Independents and Greenbackers, that its portrait should be presented to view, that men might remember its past history and avoid the coalition.

Gen O'Neal and Mr. Vincent went from here to Cleburne county.

The Whiskey Question.

We clip from an exchange the following sensible question, which we hope our readers will duly consider, truthfully answer, and then conscientiously carry out their honest convictions based upon the facts.

The whiskey question is simply a question of fact. If the saloons of a State or city do more good than they do injury; if they build up more houses than they curse, if they make more honest voters than corrupt ones; if they build up more families than they degrade, if they make more honest men than criminals; more wealthy men than paupers; then the man is not honest, not fair, not manly, not worthy to be a voter if he refuses to vote to continue the saloons. If a saloon is a blessing, a man is an enemy to the commonwealth and civilization if he opposes it or votes to destroy it. But if the reverse is true if the saloon is an enemy to society; if it corrupts voters; if it fills prisons; if it crowds peor-houses; if it breaks warm hearts, if it beggars children, how can we vote for such a curse? A vote to place men in office or keep those in office who wink at the existence of saloons is simply a vote against law, against good order, and against good morals. The whole question is: What is the relation of the saloons to society. Only this and nothing more.

Disgraceful If True.

WASHINGTON, July 16.—There is a rumor afloat here that Mrs. Garfield has received a letter of assessment from Hubbell's committee assessing her for two per cent of the President's salary.

It was supposed that the rumored assessment of the "schoolmarms' at the Indian school was the meanest specimen it would be possible to find of the Congressional Committee's work, but the New York Herald contributes the following rival cases. "One of these assessment circulars requires $6.50 from a boy 12 years of age employed in the navy yard at $1 per day. This little boy, whose name for obvious reasons we decline to give Mr. Hubbell, is an orphan, 12 years old, employed as an errand boy, and whose small pay is the support of a widowed mother and one or two children. The other of Mr. Jay Hubbell's circulars calls for $7 It is directed to an old man over 80 years of age also employed in a navy yard and receiving $1.25 per day for such light work as sweeping and other matters which a man of his age can attend to. This poor old fellow does not even have constant employment. He averages about 100 days work in a year.—Montgomery Adv.

Wills Valley Post: There is a growing feeling among the people of Dekalb and adjoining counties in favor of a new county. This desire of the people has manifested itself at various times through the local correspondence of the Post, and a still more powerful and conclusive evidence that the people interested in this change really do desire it, is the strong undercurrent of popular feeling discovered by personal conversation with hundreds of our substantial citizens.

We have personally consulted a large number of the citizens of Cherokee county who live this side of the Coosa River, and find them almost universally in favor of a cut-off from that portion of Cherokee county to form a new county that will locate the Court house west of the Coosa river. A majority of the citizens of Lookout and Sand Mountains, in the present limits of DeKalb county, are in favor of this measure, and portions of Etowah county, which originally belonged to DeKalb, are undoubtedly desirious of being united with the proposed new county, and a large number of the citizens of Marshal, on Sand Mountain, prefer the location of their court house in Wills Valley rather than at Guntersville.

A $46,000 Diamond Found in Georgia.

An old german geologist living near Norcross, Ga., picked up a peculiar stone, near that point, a few months ago, and recently gave it a close examination and found it to be a diamond of unusual size and value. He placed it in the market, and a day or two ago was offered $46,000 for his treasure by a New York dealer.—Chat. Times,

Montgomery Advertiser:

Mr. L. C. Ramsey has presented us with a specimen of Kaolin recently discovered on his farm near Notasulga. It is a beautiful one and is undoubtedly the pure article. He has discovered by his investigations thus far that it exists on forty acres, and how much more extensive is not yet known. All the specimens thus far taken are from the surface and it is believed to extend to a great depth. Several specimens of this Kaolin have been sent to Auburn for analysis with the most satisfactory results.

Mr. Ramsey has received propositions from several parties with a view of making surveys, to ascertain the extent of the deposits, and develope them on a large scale. The last proposition is from a gentleman of Pensacola. Mr. Ramsey and several experts who have inspected the veins are satisfied from the cursory examination made that the deposits are rich and extensive and of the very best.

Rev. Dr. Tichnor, late President of the A and M. College, also pronounces it to be Kaolin of the best quality, and has ordered a supply for certain purposes.

Another species of Kaolin has been discovered by Mr. Ramsey, which is of a clear, red color, or was discovered rather some years ago on the same farm. A house was painted with a paint of which it was the principal ingredient ten years ago, and the color is as bright as when first applied.

The only deposit of Kaolin that has been developed in the South is in South Carolina. It was done, and, we believe, is still worked by an English company, and the Kaolin shipped to England, which has proved to be very profitable. We hope Mr. Ramsey may realize his most sanguine hopes as to the result of the enterprise.

Register: Last Thursday noon, a little girl about two and a half years old, the daughter of Mr. Antonia Liberato, who resides on the east side of Wilkinsons second notch of State street, fell into an open well, about twenty feet deep. The mother of the little girl, hearing her scream, ran to her assistance, and without a moment's hesitation, lowered herself into the well by the chain. She caught the child in her arms and held her out of the water, but was unable to get out. Mr. Jno. P. Bogue, who lives on the corner of State and Wilkinson streets heard her calls for help and went to her assistance. He succeeded in getting mother and child out of their very unpleasant position.

Joe M. Raney and wife of Memphis, are visiting Mr. Raney's old home in Columbia, Tennessee. Joe looks as young as he did in prison at Camp Douglas twenty years ago when he cried out "Hurrah for Jeff Davis!" a proceeding very dangerous in that locality. The prisoners were drawn up and a cannon loaded to the muzzle placed in front of them, and an officer threatened to touch it off if the name of the man that halloed for Jeff Davis was not given. The brave men around all stood unmoved and said by their silence that they would suffer death rather than betray Joe whom they all liked. Joe was about to step forward and acknowledge that he had committed the awful crime— for he is brave and true—when a man named Coffee sung out that "Joe Rainey did it." Joe was taken off and placed in solitary confinement and fed on bread and water, all of which he bore cheerfully without a murmur.

Messrs. Hammett and Adams, Clayton Ala., lumber dealers write: "We have one of Richie & Dyer's road Engines, manufactured by Messrs Richie & Dyer, Hamilton, Ohio which is a new thing to this country. It can be used either for hauling purposes or for driving machinery, but is especiallay adapted for hauling. We think it cannot be excelled, neither in its working capacity nor in its durability. We use it for hauling logs and lumber, and are very well satisfied with it."

Philadelphia Record says: the the owners of the steel mill in the United States ought not to stand out with their workmen on the question of wages. They are so roundly protected by import duties and unexpired patents that they can well afford to pay high wages. If the tariff is indeed in the interest of the working men, this double ended monopoly has an oportunity to give some proof of it.

Really Wonderful

Willie Lester, aged ten years, lives with his father on the Wea Plains. His right ear is as large as a palm leaf fan, while the other is no bigger than the ear of an ordinary sized doll. With his small ear he can hear the faintest buzzing of the smallest bugs and insects, and even detect sounds uttered by the minutest animalculæ—so small that they are not even visible to the naked eye. A fly running along a windowpane, a caterpiller crawling across a a sheet of paper makes sufficient noise to attract his attention, even when his back is turned. The sense of hearing is so acute in this ear that it is absolutely painful to him and he is compelled to wear a cork in it at all times. The right and large ear is quite the reverse of its little companion in both powers and properties. To it those minute and near sounds so plainly discernable to the other are lost, but distant noises are readily heard. Although residing fifteen and one quarter miles from any railroad— LaFayette being the nearest point—yet Willie can distinctly hear the train and mills blowing their whistles and can easily distinguish between the city bells and the engine bells. He can hear the coming of a storm long before there are any signs of it in the air, and even long before the weather bureau gives notice of its approach. At a suggestion of a neighbor, Mr. Lester had a wire gauze lid with tin rim made to fit over Willies, ear. It consists of two thicknesses of gauze, the outer one being of larger mesh than the inner one; between the two there is an intervening thickness of loose flannel to soften sounds. Willie wears it continually, and this, with the cork in the small ear, has the effect of reducing his hearing to a normal condition. Lafayette (Ind.) Courier.

PERRY DAVIS'
VEGETABLE
PAIN KILLER

A Never-Failing Cure for Burns, Scalds, Bruises, Cuts, Sores, etc.

After forty years of trial, PERRY DAVIS' PAIN KILLER stands unrivaled. It is safe! It acts immediately! It never fails!

Editor of the St. John (N.B.) News, says: In flesh wounds, aches, pains, sores, etc., it is the most effectual remedy we know of. No family should be without a bottle of it for a single hour.

From the Cincinnati Dispatch: We have seen its magic effects, and know it to be a good article.

From I. S. Potter, U. S. Consul at Crefeld, Rhenish Prussia: After long years of use, I am satisfied it is positively efficient as a healing remedy for wounds, bruises, and sprains.

W. W. Sharper, Valdosta, Ga., says: It is a panacea for all bruises and burns.

From R. W. Adams, Saco, Me.: It gave me immediate relief.

R. Lewis says: In forty years' use it never has failed me.

W. W. Lum, Nicholville, N. Y., says: I use your PAIN KILLER frequently. It relieves pain and soreness, and heals wounds like magic.

J. W. Dee says: For scalds and burns it has no equal.

PERRY DAVIS' PAIN KILLER is not a new untried remedy. For forty years it has been in constant use; and those who have used it the longest are its best friends.

Its success is entirely because of its merit. Every family should have a bottle ready for use. Much pain and heavy doctors' bills may often be saved by prompt application of the PAIN KILLER. Unlike most medicines, it is perfectly safe even in the hands of a child. Try it once thoroughly, and it will prove its value. Your druggist has it at 25c., 50c., and $1.00 per bottle.

But we can in no instance ...break the rule. Once begin it, and ...we would not know where to draw ...the line. We have said this much ...for the benefit of corespondents ...generally.

Arrangements have been made by the Real Estate Loan & Banking Co. of Alabama to extend their business into Etowah county trough Messrs. Stevenson & Grant. All necessary papers have been left at the Probate office at Etowah county for the convenience of parties, and applications will be taken there. The people of Etowah county may now receive the same benefits from this Loan Association that the people of Calhoun have. A large sum of money has been put out in this county and parties who have borrowed it are much pleased. Numbers of them have already so used it as to save the entire five years expense of the loan in a single season. One gentlemen did this in one single transaction by making the difference between the cash and credit prices of the corn he was compelled to buy.

There is some apprehension on the minds of the people of this county, we find, that the next Legislature will pass a stock law and prohibition law for this county, and some other local measures that have been discussed. To allay this feeling, we will say that the people of Calhoun may rest assured that her Senator and Representative will urge no local measure of any character, unless it clearly appear that the people of the county desire it. This is Democracy. When the people want a local law, and will make that want known at Montgomery, they will work for the law earnestly.

Mr. Cadmas, the land examiner of the Real Estate Loan and Banking Company of Alabama, and a member of the great cotton Commission house of the firm in Selma, was in Jacksonville Saturday and Sunday. Monday in company with the editor of the Republican, he went to Gadsden, to make arrangements for extending the operations of the company into Etowah county. The company will do a very large advancing business the coming fall on crop lein security, and are making arrangements now to that end. It will be much cheaper for farmers to borrow money at a reasonable rate of interest and pay cash for supplies next year, than to run open accounts with their merchants at credit prices. It has been tested by parties in this county this year.

Hon. Jno. D. Hammond has been filling his published appointments. So far the attendance, while not large, has been respectable in numbers. It was not expected that at this busy season, in the entire absence of any political excitement, farmers would leave their crops to go out to hear speaking. So far no opposition to Mr. Hammond has been developed in the shape of an opposing candidate. For the first time in the history of Calhoun, perhaps, we have only one candidate in the field, and this when there has been no nomination by the democracy. Generally in free races of this kind, from three to four men run for the Legislature. Mr. Hammond may be congratulated on his easy walk over so far. But little over two weeks now remain until the election.

The communication of Dogberry reached us too late for this week. We will take this occasion to say to corespondents, that all communications intended for the week's issue must reach us by Wednesday's mail to insure insertion.

ASHVILLE, ALA., July 17, 1882.

MESSRS. GRANT & HAMMOND, Jacksonville, Ala.

GENTS—Yours of the 12 inst. has been received. My absence at the time it came has delayed a reply. The highest duty of the citizen is to go to the polls and vote after having used all available means to ascertain the right. Recogoizing this, I am willing to defer opening court until jurors, &c., can reach the court house after having cast their ballots, which they can do, I presume, by one o'clock, p. m. You may therfore inform jurors, and others, in any way you think proper, that they will not be expected at the court house earlier than that hour. Yours truly,

L. F BOX.

CROSS PLAINS LOCALS.

We have had another splendid rain since my last report. The crops up here are simply magnificent.

Our town was honored with the presence of Gen. E. A. O'Neal, the next Governor of Alabama, last Thursday. Several of our citizens paid their respects to him during the evening, and were much pleased with his genial manners and fine conversational powers. There was a universal desire to hear the Gen. Speak, but we had regard to the fact, that every rest day allowed him during this active canvass, is really necessary.

Mr. D. C. Savage and family have gone to Blount, on a visit.

Our friend Dud don't go off from home often and we know he will enjoy this much needed respite. We wish them a pleasant trip and a good time.

There was a Sunday school celebration at our sister town, Ambersonville, last Friday, The Cross Plains Brass Band furnished the music for the occasion. Our boys say they had a good time and a big dinner.

The stockholders in the Institute property hold a meeting last week and resolved to enlarge the building Our school is growing so rapidly under its present able management that we are obliged to have more room. Prof. Stark, was compelled to move out of the old school house for lack of room, and now he finds that the large Institute is inadequate also. It was resolved to build another large room to the present auditorium and a committee was appointed to solicit subscriptions for that purpose. It is to be hoped that all our people will contribute to this important enterprise. Good schools are indispensible in these enlightened times, and serve to give a town more reputation than railroads. Good schools and good churches are the watchwords of the day. Let us place the standard of moral and intellectual excellence high, and urge our youths to aspire to the highest point.

We were pleased to meet on our streets last week, Mr. J. M. Nelson of Ashland. He speaks of locating in our town. We will give him a hearty welcome.

We also had the pleasure of shaking the hands of our two young doctor friends Frank B. and John E. Teague, a few days ago. We are glad to hear that they are both meeting with success.

Born, on the evening of the 16th inst to Mr and Mrs James H. Powers, two sons. Jim looks as happy as a big sunflower.

Mr. Loffland purchased the stock of Little and Dailey and not Loffland and Gibbony, as stated last week.

PEEK'S HILL, ALA. July 15, '82.

MR. EDITOR:—In looking over your paper I see several locals from different sections of this county, and thought I would scribble a letter to you with regard to this section.

Corn crops are looking fine, and every farmer is holding up his head in anticipation of the future. Cotton is growing finely and fruiting well and bids fair to remunerate the grower.

Health in this immediate neighborhood tolerably good.

Wheat and oats came in time to save the farmer the trouble of making his visit to market for corn to finish his crop on. Threshing is over in this locality. Pruitt and Burns wound up yesterday evening and brought their thrasher home. On winding up they thrashed 210 bushels of oats in fifty-seven minutes. They have the best outfit for thrashing of any in this country; and I doubt whether there can be one brought that would excel it in time and clean thrashing.

The Masonic fraternity is expecting a lecture from the Grand Lecturer at Peeks Hill to-day.

Success to the Republican. May we all be well posted through its columns upon the issues of the present election canvass, and may we act with deliberation and firmness. OBSERVER.

TATE SPRINGS.

Health and Pleasure for Alabamians.

Already fourteen States are represented by the guests in attendance at Tate Springs, East Tennessee. A good company has been there all winter and has rapidly increased since the 1st of March. The demand for the water has doubled in the past six months, and is being shipped now to all points of the union at the rate of 2,000 bbls. per. annum. We have seen no natural mineral water so strongly endorsed as a remedial agent for dyspepsia and diseases of the liver, stomach, bowels and kidneys. Our doctors prescribe it and hundreds in Alabama are daily drinking thee water at home and can attest its power over disease. When the summer travel sets in, more of our Alabama "summer resorters" will be found at Tate Springs than at any other resort outside of the State. Dr. J. S. Weatherly of Montgomery, is resident physician. The new building is all complete and furnished. Send for for large 40 page pamphlet containing full information on all points. Messrs. Tomlinson & Ragsdale, proprietors, will promptly answer all inquiries. jul9

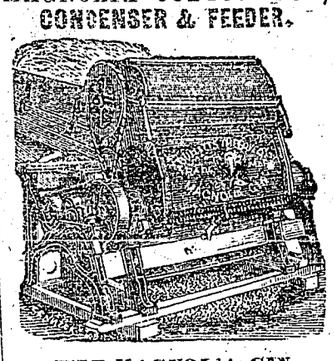
THE GULLETT IMPROVED
MAGNOLIA COTTON GIN,
CONDENSER & FEEDER.



THE MAGNOLIA GIN

has come in competition with nearly every other Gin on the market, at State Fairs, etc., and in every instance has established its superiority in the following essentials, viz:

Light Draft,
QUICK AND GOOD WORK AND FINE SAMPLE.

TESTIMONIALS.

ALEXANDRIA, ALA, Dec. 15, 1880.

Messrs. Berrys & Co., Rome, Ga.,

DEAR SIRS: In reply to your enquiry, I will say the sixty saw Light Draft Gullett Gin bought of you last fall gives perfect satisfaction. I have been ginning seventeen years, and I have yet to see a Gin that makes as good a sample from dirty cotton as the Gullett. The feeder works perfectly in every respect. I would not have a gin without one
W. PHIL COOPER.

GRIFFIN, GA., March 1, 1879.

We, the undersigned are using the Gullett Improved Light Draft Cotton Gin. The Gin is of superior workmanship. For fast ginning, safety in running, and light draft, (to do the same work,) we think it has no equal; but the most important feature is the attachment for opening and improving the sample. The best cotton is improved by it so as to bring form ½ to ½ cent, and stained and dirty cotton from ½ to 1 cent per pound more in market than other Gins.

ROME, GA., March 7th, 1881.

We, the undersigned buyers and shippers of cotton in Rome, Georgia, take pleasure in recommending the new Improved Light Draft Gullett Gin as the best Gin known to us, for the reason that it turns out smoother and cleaner cotton with less nap, and consequently is worth more money.

MANHOOD
How Lost, How Restored.
Just published, a new editiou of Dr Culverwell's Celebrated Essay on the radical cure of SPERMATORRHŒA or Seminal Weakness, Involuntary Seminal Losses, Impotency, Mental and physical Incapacity, Impediments to marriage, etc; also, Consumption, Epilepsy and Fits, induced by self-indulgence or sexual extravagance, &c.
The celebrated author, in this admirable Essay clearly demonstrates, from a thirty years's successful practice, that the alarming consequences of self-abuse may be radically cured, pointing out a mode of cure at once simple, certain, and effectual, by means of which every sufferer, no matter what his condition may be, may cure himself cheaply, privately and radically.

AGRICULTURE.

What a Pint of Manure Did.—A Wisconsin farmer sends this experience: "Last year, in hauling yard manure across a field afterwards planted to corn, some of it scattered off in driblets—from a handful to a pint or so in a place. When planting the corn, I found portions of these droppings, and where noticed, drew them into the hills and with the hoe mixed them a little with the soil as the seed was dropped. In three instances where a large handful or about a pint of the manure was thus put in, a stick was driven down to mark the hills. When hoeing, we noticed that in these hills the corn plants had started off more vigorously, were greener, and at the third hoeing they were 6 to 12 inches higher than the other hills adjoining. Our curiosity being awakened we followed up the observations, and when gathering the crop, each of the three stalks in the three hills, had two large plump ears, while the surrounding corn did not average one good ear to the stalk. This set us to thinking and figuring. That bit of manure had given the young corn roots a vigorous start just as good feed starts off a young calf, or pig, or lamb, and the roots penetrated further in every direction and gathered more food and moisture. These stalks being better nourished from below, ran far away from the poorly fed neighbors. As to the figures, the rows were 3½ feet apart, and the hills three feet distant in the rows, say 4,000 hills on an acre, and 4,000 pints of manure is about 62½ bushels, or two large wagon loads. Anybody can reckon the difference between six large, well filled ears of corn on each hill, and less than 3 per hill, and the cost of the manure as compared with the total value of the final crop The plowing, and the seed, and the hoeing, amount to the same in each case. All I have to say is, that every corn hill planted on my farm this year will have at least a pint of manure in it.

Apple Pomace as a Manure.—Apple pomace, as well as the leaves of the tree, if spread thickly on the land while in a green state, will destroy all vegetation beneath them. When put into large heaps they have been known to kill trees. Their deleterious effects upon vegetation are not because they do not contain any fertilizing properties but because they contain, while in a green state, too great a proportion of acid for their other ingredients. They also pack so closely together as to exclude both air and light, without which vegetable growth cannot long exist. Some years ago I mulched, pretty heavily, some strawberry plants with about half-dried cherry and apple tree leaves, with a view to protect them during wintar. The result was the death of nearly all my plants by spring, and the land remained sour most of the following summer. If apple pomace be put in a heap and exposed to the frost of winter, and in the spring incorporated with some dry straw or corn cobs, with a small portion of unslacked lime, and again left exposed to the summer suns, by fall the acid will be mostly exhausted, and the compost makes an excellent top dressing for winter wheat. It may be used to advantage during winter as a top dressing for meadows or other grass land. It should not be used until the acid has evaporated. For the destruction of any of the varieties of Linaria (wild flax), yarrow, milfoil or any other noxious perennial plant, I know of nothing better than a liberal application of salt. Salt, when used sparingly on growing crops, somewhat distant from the seacost, is an excellent fertilizer. When used in large quantities it becomes a speedy exterminator of vegetable matter. It also puts the land into excellent condition for future crops.

Raising the Sunflower for its Seed.—For a year or two the subject of feeding the seed of sunflowers to fowls has been referred to in poultry journals frequently with approval, and we have seen no word in opposition. Although this flower, if it can be so called, has come into favor even among ladies and some pantaloon creatures who are said to be of male gender, it is by no means an attractive floral attribute. It is something among flowers that the elephant is among beasts, huge and uncouth. Still if it possesses the merit of producing wholesome food for the feathered tribe, it is to that extent so much beyond flowers in solid value. But it being proved that it is a plant of more or less value for its seed, and being very hardy in its nature, it substitutes usefulness for beauty; and as it will grow in every out-of-the-way corner and place, where scarcely anything else can be cultivated, it can be honestly recommended to the keeper of fowls to appropriate such plots of ground to the raising of it for its seed. It would not require much space to produce from 3 to five bushels of seed, which would be a substantial addition to the winter season's supply of chicken-food.

The Tuberose and Gladiolus.—These bulbs have been produced of late years in such quantities that they are now sold at prices which bring them within the reach of all. The Tuberose, so valued for its fragrance, is often injured by being planted too early. The first of May is soon enough to start the bulbs; they may be planted in pots or boxes of soil, and placed in the green house, or in a warm room, and they will be sufficiently advanced to be planted in the open ground by the last of May or the early part of June. They should have a warm, rich spot, and the flower stalk, as it develops, be supported by a slender stake. The Gladiolus, on the other hand, is almost hardy. It affords a wide range of colors, and a bed of them is very showy. Mixed, unnamed bulbs, can be bought at a much less price than the named kinds. They should be planted a foot apart with the top of the bulb at least two inches below the surface. It is well to plant a portion of the bulbs every two weeks until the first half of June to insure a continuous bloom. It is well to stake the flower stalks to keep them from being broken down by the wind just as they are in their prime.

Care of Pastures.—A good permanent pasture, handy to the barnyard, is very convenient, almost a necessity, on every well regulated farm. Such a field needs to be well fertilized and cared for, that it may give the best return in an abundant supply of green food, for farm stock. A top-dressing of fine, well-rotted manure in winter is excellent, but if not done, a dressing of 50 to 100 pounds of nitrate of soda per acre may be applied. It is best to sow this just before a shower, that the rain may carry this very soluble food to the roots of the plants. After supplying the necessary fertilizers, it is important not to overstock the pasture. Let the adjustment between the number of animals and the capacity of the field be such, that there may be good feeding throughout the whole season. If such a pasture has a natural spring, its value is much increased. The next to this is a well, provided with a windmill, for raising an abundant supply of water.

Those who use lime as a fertilizer apply from ten to fifty bushels to the acre; ashes may be applied at the same rate, salt at the rate of two hundred to four hundred pounds, and plaster at the rate of one hundred pounds.

DOMESTIC.

Royal Corn Bread.—Make a pint of batter of two-thirds nice corn meal and one-third coarse flour stirred in water; let it stand in a warm place until it ferments well; then add warm water, two or three spoonfuls or molasses, a teaspoonful of salt and a teaspoonful of soda, or enough to correct the acidity, then thicken with corn meal and coarse flour, in the same proportion as at first, making the batter about the same consistency as for griddle cakes; oil your baking dish and fill about half full, always have about a pint of the batter to start with again. Place the loaf in a steamer and steam it two hours for a two-quart loaf, and bake it in the oven about thirty minutes to brown it. The same recipe may be used for griddle cakes.

An excellent plan to save old napkins and table-cloths is to cut out the good parts and put them away in a bag, appropriately labeled, and have them ready for use in case of sickness. A house-wife whose system is so complete that it is hard to believe that she has lived on earth only about forty years gives this advice, and she says also that we should keep another bag with pieces of flannel, and another with old cotton cloth, for the same purpose.

French Omelette.—Take four eggs, separate the yolks from the whites, beat the white to a snow on a dinner plate; then beat the yolks in a small basin with sugar to taste, then add a small pinch of baking soda and three large tablespoonfuls of flour, and milk enough to make a thin batter; then pour into an omelette-pan, previously heated and greased, spread the white over the top. Fire by holding high above the fire till set brown on the top; double over and serve hot with jam.

Orange Jelly.—Peel twelve large oranges; cut them into small pieces, and squeeze them thoroughly through a linen bag. To one pint of juice add one pound of sugar; when the sugar is dissolved put it over the fire; dissolve two ounces of isinglass in just hot water enough to cover it, and add it to the jelly as it begins to boil. Let it boil very fast for twenty minutes. Put it hot into the jars, and tie it up with papers dipped in brandy. Lemon jelly may be made in the same way, only to one pint of juice add two pounds of sugar.

Peanut Candy.—One scant pint of molasses, four quarts of peanuts, measured before they are shelled, two tablespoonfuls of vanilla, one teaspoonful of soda. Boil the molasses until it hardens, in cold water, when dropped from the spoon. Stir in the vanilla, then the soda, dry. Lastly, the shelled peanuts. Turn out into shallow dishes well buttered, and press it down smooth with a wooden spoon.

Orangeade.—Pour a pint of boiling water over a sliced orange. When cold strain it, and sweeten it to suit the palate. Another way: Squeeze the juice from six oranges and two lemons into a quart of boiling water, then slice them and put them in with the juice. Pour the fluid frequently and quickly from one jug to another, and strain it.

Oat Meal Pudding.—Mix two heaping tablespoonfuls in a half teacupful of milk, sweeten to taste and stir over the fire for ten minutes; then put in a half teacupful of fine bread crumbs, one-half teacup of finely shred suet, and two well-beaten eggs. Stir together well, season with lemon or nutmeg. Put into a buttered pudding dish, and bake one hour.

Macaroons.—Pulverize one pound of sweet almonds quite fine with the whites of four eggs; add two and a half pounds of sugar and rub them well together; put in by degrees ten more whites, working them well as you put them in; put the mixture into a biscuit funnel and lay them out on water paper in pieces about the size of a walnut; put three or four pieces of almonds cut into thin slips on each, and bake them on a baking plate in a slow oven one-half hour.

Hash made of two parts potato, one part corn beef and one part beets is an appetizing dish for breakfast. The potatoes and beets should be boiled the day before; chop them and the beef fine; season with butter, pepper and salt, and some hot vinegar and mustard may be added if you choose.

Roast Pigeon.—Wipe them quite dry, truss them, and season them inside with pepper and salt, and put a piece of butter the size of a walnut in each. Put them down to a sharp fire and baste them all the time they are cooking. They will take about half an hour. Garnish them with white parsley and serve with a tureen of bread sauce.

A delicious fish sauce is made of half a cup of butter, one tablespoonful of parsley chopped very fine, a little salt, and pepper, and the juice of two small lemons, or of one large one. Warm the butter a little so that you can easily beat it to a cream, then mix with the other ingredients, putting the parsley in last, just before sending it to the table.

An excellent way to warm a roast of beef is to put it in a kettle, and cover the meat with very thin slices of onions. Scatter pepper and salt over them, put in a lump of butter, and just enough water to keep the meat from burning; let it warm slowly on the back part of the stove, and then move it forward and let the onions cook.

Gateaux Madelaines.—One pound of sugar, sixteen eggs, half pound of butter, three quarters pound of best flour. Beat the eggs and the sugar together in a bowl; when done mix in the flour, then the butter. Put the paste in small moulds and bake in a warm oven.

Prune Pudding.—One-half pound of prunes boiled soft and thick; remove the stones and sweeten well; then add the whites of six eggs beaten stiff; chop the prunes fine; then stir in the eggs; put into a dish and bake a light brown. Serve with sweetened cream.

Codfish Stewed.—Boil a piece of codfish, but do not overdo it. Pick out the flesh in flakes, put them in a saucepan with a piece of butter, pepper and salt to taste, some minced parsley and the juice of a lemon; with a dust of cayenne. Put it on the fire till quite hot, and serve.

Eggs in the Shell.—Put them into boiling water; take them off the fire; cover them five minutes to allow them to set; then take them out of the water and serve in a folded napkin.

Orange and Apple Preserve.—Peel some oranges and simmer them until tender. Then cut them into slices; remove the seeds and put them into jelly pots. Now prepare some apple jelly and pour it over them, so as to fill the pots.

HUMOROUS.

It is reported of one of the great capitalists of Gotham that once upon a time he found an article in one of the dailies which rather peeled the man off in spots and he called in his confidential secretary and said:

"James, go out and see what the Daily Plaster can be bought for: I'll buy it and throw everything into the bay!"

James went out on the errand and returned and reported the price at $700,000.

"Too much—too much!" replied the magnate. "James go out and see what it will cost me to start an opposition daily."

James sallied forth to get the figure, and on his return reported that half a million dollars would perhaps run one for a year or so.

"Too much—too infernal much!" was the decided reply. "James, go out and buy a dollar bouquet and send it to the editor with my compliments. ——'m, James, ——'m! if revenge costs that much money we've got to knuckle and let him take the track."

Fear Not.

All kidney and urinary complaints, especially Bright's Disease, Diabetes and Liver troubles, Hop Bitters will surely and lastingly cure. Cases exactly like your own have been cured in your own neighborhood, and you can find reliable proof at home of what Hop Bitters has and can do.

There is a perceptible coolness between young Seabury, one of the fashionable young men in Austin, and Gilhooly. Seabury owns a horse which he thinks is the finest horse in the world. Young Seabury was bragging about his horse to a crowd of acquaintances the other day, and he said, among other important things, that the horse was so fast on the previous day that he overtook a swallow, the horse's ear striking the bird. "Are you sure the swallow was not coming from the opposite direction?" asked Gilhooly, with the air of a man who wanted to know. "Of course not," was the indignant response. "I reckon then that the swallow wanted to build her nest in your horse's ear. The horse went so slow the swallow could not see he was moving. Wonderful horse.

If You Are Sick, Read

the Kidney-Wort advertisement in another column, and it will explain to you the rational method of getting well. Kidney-Wort will save you more doctor's bills than any other medicine known. Acting with specific energy on the kidneys and liver, it cures the worst diseases caused by their derangement. Use it at once. In dry and liquid form. Either is equally efficient, the liquid is the easiest, but the dry is the most economical.—Interior.

"When you were last here," said the Magistrate to the prisoner, "you promised me that if I released you you would go to work. Why haven't you kept your word?" "Judge," returned the victim, meekly, "I didn't want to be breading any disturbance, and I was afraid if I went to work that I would get on a strike."

H. H. Warner & Co: Sirs—Mrs. Bardwell has been a long sufferer from chronic inflamation of the bladder, which yielded to no treatment until she began the use of your Safe Kidney and Liver Cure. We recommend the remedy at all times.

A Montreal paper mixed up an account of mission progress in Africa and a receipt to make tomato catsup, viz: "They (the missionairs) are accustomed to begin their work by buying heathen children and educating them. The easiest and best way to prepare them is to first wipe them with a clean towel, then place them in dripping-pans and bake them till they are tender."

For dyspepsia, indigestion, depression of spirits and general debility, in their various forms; also as a preventive against fever and ague and other intermittent fevers, the "Ferro-Phosphorated Elixir of Calisaya," made by Caswell, Hazard & Co, New York, sold by all Druggists, is the best tonic; and for patients recovering from fever or other sickness, it has no equal.

"Your future husband seems very exacting; he has been stipulating for all sorts of things," said a mother to a daughter, who was about getting married. "Never mind, mamma;" said the affectionate girl, who was already dressed for the wedding, "these are his last wishes."

Two Leipsic chemists have devised a process for obtaining sugar in a permanently liquid form. This result is said to be effected by adding to a purified sugar solution a small quantity of citric acid, which combines with the sugar and deprives it of its tendency to crystalize.

Mr. R. H. Stevens: Dear Sir—My little daughter Stella has been afflicted a long time with Scrofula, suffering everything. I employed different physicians in East Boston, but they helped her none. I bought some of your Powder Form Vegetine and my wife steeped it and gave it to the child according to the directions, and we were surprised in a fortnight's time to see how the child had gained in flesh and strength. The Brazos Independent is in a quandary about the mouth of the Brazos river. Its mouth is not wide enough nor deep enough as it is now. We would like to make a suggestion for the benefit of those who want to see the mouth of the Brazos opened wider than it is. Elect the Brazos river to the Legislature. The Brazos river has a great many legislative qualifications. Like most legislators, its origin is rather obscure. The Brazos river is very crooked. So is the average legislator. The Brazos river never dries up completely. That's the kind of creek a legislator is. The current or flow of the Brazos is not clear at all, but rather muddy, and often is choked up with trash. It seems to us that with these qualifications it cannot be kept out of the Legislature. It is true it will have the advantage over some members of the Texas Legislature by having a head of its own.

Terrible Sufferings.

Liver Kidney and Bright's Disease.

A medicine that destroys the germ or cause of Bright's Disease, Diabetes, Kidney and Liver Complaints, and has power to root them out of the system, is above all price. Such a medicine is Hop bitters, and positive proof of this can be found by one trial, or by asking your neighbors, who have been cured by it.

An Old Doctor's Advice.

It was this: "Trust in God and keep your bowels open." For this purpose many an old doctor has advised the habitually costive to take Kidney-Wort—for no other remedy so effectually overcomes this condition, and that without the distress and griping which other medicines cause. It is a radical cure for piles. Don't fail to use it.—Translated from the New Yorker Zeitung.

We return the 25 cents sent for postage and packing to any person who, on receiving the Outfit, is not satisfied with it in all respects, or who, on trying the business, is not fully satisfied. No one fails—all are more than satisfied. No Agents Conduct the Business. The agent having ordered and received an Outfit goes around from house to house, showing the mammoth illustrated paper and elegant premium chromos; he explains that those who subscribe at once, paying only $1, will receive the paper for fifteen months, and all 12 of the chromos free. DON'T TAKE IT TO HEART.

Would break like a bubble,
And into the waters of Lethe depart,
Did we not rehearse it,
And tenderly nurse it,
And give it a permanent place in the heart.

There's many a sorrow
Would vanish to-morrow,
Were we but willing to furnish the wings,
So sadly intruding,
And quietly brooding
It hatches out all sorts of horrible things.

How welcome the seeming
Of looks that are beaming,
Whether one's wealthy or whether one's poor;
Eye's bright as a berry,
Checks red as a cherry,
The groan and the curse, and the heartache cure.

Resolved to be merry,
All worry to ferry
Across the famed waters that bid us forget,
And no longer fearful,
But happy and cheerful,
We feel life has much that's worth living for yet.

ONLY FOR A TIME.

"That is a sweet voice—very," said Captain Mayell; "and with more cultivation too than one is apt to find among the general run of itinerant minstrels."

He was standing at the corner of the street waiting for an omnibus.

Somewhere there was a block of vehicles, and the omnibus was slow in making its appearance, but while he waited Captain Mayell listened vaguely to the wild street ballad warbled by a fresh, exquisitely true young voice to the fitful accompaniment of a cracked violin

A little crowd had gathered round the corner.

The blind fiddler in his tattered velveteen coat and picturesque white beard passed his hat around, and the singer, with her face half veiled by the folds of the black shawl, which was thrown over her head and fell in long nun-like folds about her slight person, stood holding the violin.

As her large liquid eyes fell on Mayell he advanced, and holding out a silver coin, spoke some laughable sentence in the musical modulations of the Italian language.

She took the money with a murmured word of thanks, but the shy, surprised glance denoted that she had not understood him.

"So they are not Italian's after all," said Mayell, as he sprang into the omnibus. "I was sure that olive skin, and those deep melting eyes could only have caught their glow under the skies of Italy.

"Well, it only shows how easy one is to be mistaken. At all events, it was a fair, dimpled little face, and I hope her grizzle-bearded old friend will reap an ample harvest of pennies."

And in searching for the abiding-place of his old friend, Mr. Castleton, the decayed artist, he completely forgot the little incident of the evening.

"No. 44, Sea Court," he said to himself. "Yes, this must be the place. And yet," glancing up at the mildewed brick walls and indescribable shabbiness of the old house, "who would have expected to find Warde Castleton here?"

"Warde Castleton, the descendant of a long line of ancestry—Warde Castleton, whom I can remember as the master of Castle Hall."

"Bad management, extravagant living, mad investments—this is what they have brought him to. Poor fellow! one can scarcely offer charity to him; and yet what is to be done?"

And groping his way into the hall, where a sort of Cimmerian darkness reigned, he managed to inquire his way to the floor where Mr. Castleton lived.

The majestic old artist came forward to receive him, in a tattered dressing-gown which had once been ruby velvet, a cap of the same material on his head, and a maulstick in his hand.

"Ah, Mayell, my old friend," he cried, grasping the hand of the unexpected guest—"or rather the young friend of my old days—you are welcome."

"You find me rather indifferently situated; but we all know that genius is, at times, under a cloud.

"Walk in—walk in! Here is Mrs. Castleton, and Beatrix, my eldest daughter. But where is Miriam?—little Miriam, the beauty and the runaway of the flock? Call her, Trix. Tell her to get us some supper. She will be here directly."

Mrs. Castleton, a little old lady in a lace cap, who had lost the use of her limbs, sat knitting in a wheeled chair, by the sadly insufficient fire.

Her poor nose was blue, and the hand which she held out to Clarence Mayell was cold as an icicle.

Beatrix, a pale young woman of twenty, drew an old screen before the table, on which was a plate of cold meat and a pitcher of thin tea, and made haste to adjust the easel so as to hide the cot-bed in the corner.

Mr. Castleton pointed to the easel, with a flourish of the hand.

"You see, Mayell," said he, "that I still cling to my old habits."

"My hand is scarcely as steady now as I could wish, but it seems necessary to sell a picture now and then. Trix, where is your sister? Why does not Miriam come in? We have some wealthy acquaintances, Mayell," the old man continued, "who decline to buy my pictures, and who contrive systematically to ignore us."

"But I am told that Miriam frequently goes to them. Well, well, I cannot wonder—the child is young, and this," glancing contemptuously around the room, "is hardly the place to attract a girl's capricious fancy. Trixy here is true to her old parents."

"Papa," said Beatrix, coloring, "do not blame Miriam. She——"

"Have I blamed her?" The old artist shrugged his shoulders. "She is young—she is very young—that is all. As I was saying, Mayell, I sell a picture now and then, and so we manage to keep alive. Just let me show you some of the ideas I have sketched on canvas."

And while Captain Mayell turned over the old man's portfolio and cogitated within himself how he might best offer to purchase a picture without hurting the sensitive pride of the artist, the silent Beatrix put more coal on the dying fire, spread a clean cloth on the table, and set forth a meal which had evidently been purchased in haste from the shelves of the nearest cheap restaurant.

Half of a skinny cold duck, a little dab of muddy currant jelly, a pile of bread, and a potato salad.

And when the unappetising meal was over, and they sat shivering by the fire, the door opened, and in glided a small slight figure like a shadow.

"It's Miriam," said Mr. Castleton; "my youngest girl. Come in, pet, and speak to Captain Mayell."

Miriam stopped abruptly in the doorway, and turned first red, then pale, before she advanced and held out an unwilling hand.

Mayell rose and bowed over it; but as their eyes met he smiled a little.

"Miss Castleton," said he, "I am very happy to meet you."

And Miriam hid herself away behind her mother's chair, close to Beatrix, and do what Captain Mayell would, he could not succeed in drawing her into the conversation.

"I will make her look up," he said to himself, a little chagrined at the steadfastness with which the dark eyes were bent towards the fire.

Turning to the artist he asked carelessly—

"Does your daughter sing."

"A little, in a wild way, like a lark or a nightingale," said Mr. Castleton. "She had a guitar once, but it is lost or broken, or something. Can't you sing for us, daughter?"

The ruse was successful.

Miriam looked up in a frightened way, her eyes glittering, her cheeks glowing in red spots.

"I—I cannot sing to night," she said hurriedly. "Please, papa, dont ask me."

But when Captain Mayell had taken leave for the night, and was groping his way down the stairs, he was most suddenly and unexpectedly confronted by Miriam herself wrapped in the black shawl, with Beatrix at her side.

"Captain Mayell," said Beatrix in a low voice, "what must you think? For our own sakes we owe you an explanation."

"Hush, Trix!" cried Miriam excited. "All this preamble is quite unnecessary. I will tell him all about it."

"Papa doesn't know that I sing with old Bartimeo in the streets—but mamma does and Trix.

"They know that Bartimeo takes excellent care of me; and I wear his daughter's dress—and we cannot let poor papa starve."

"And," soberly added Trix, "we give papa the money, and he thinks old Bartimeo has sold a picture for him to some of the Italian dealers down town.

"Poor papa! and it makes him so happy! And, indeed, indeed no one speaks to Miriam except with the greatest courtesy and kindness. And we hope you will not betray our secret to poor papa, as he would never, never, forgive us at all,"

"Pray," cried Mayell genuinely touched, "do not imagine that I could be guilty of such a dishonorable thing. Believe me, Miss Castleton——"

Miriam, very white and cold, was looking at him with eyes that flashed scornful lightning.

"Here is the wretched coin you gave me," said she. "Take it back."

"Why?" he asked, confounded and hurt.

"Because I hate you," she answered, bruptly seizing her sister's arm. "Come, Trix, let us go."

But he posted himself directly across her path, determined not thus to part.

"But why do you hate me?" said he; "because I respect your courage and sense, and honor your filial duty?"

"Because you despise me," she retorted.

"Never," he cried, taking her hand in spite of herself; and then and there they became fast friends.

"I am coming to-morrow," he said, "to order a picture of your father. Will you also bid me welcome?"

And she answered shyly—

"Yes."

But she went out singing no more.

Blind Bartimeo and his violin were unaccompanied now.

Warde Castleton died the next summer, entirely unaware of the deception which had been practiced upon him, and Captain Mayell asked pretty Miriam to be his wife,

"Do you know, darling," he said, "I have loved you ever since I saw you singing on the pavement in that picturesque Italian costume."

And among her wedding gifts was a diamond-studded gold locket, in which was set the tiny silver coin which he had given her on that bleak November afternoon when the twilight was verging into dusk.

A Captain's Coolness.

The steamer Springing recently went up the river from Cincinnati with two hundred residents of Nelson's Business School of both sexes, mostly persons of nearly mature years, on a picnic to Parker's Grove, about fourteen miles up the Ohio river. The steamer, returning, arrived near the Newport railroad bridge at seven o'clock. The river is nearly forty feet high and a strong wind was blowing. The steamer had to lower her chimneys to get under the bridge. Captain Hart was at the wheel. There was some delay in lowering the chimneys on account of imperfect working machinery. The strong wind from the north struck the boat, which was high on the water on account of a light load. The captain saw the boat was drifting so as to strike the edge of the bridge pier amidships. He saw at a glance the peril of the position. It was too late to back against a strong current and a powerful gale. He ordered on all the steam possible and dashed ahead. The starboard side of the steamer struck the pier. All the passengers who were on the upper deck were jostled and many thrown on their faces. The passengers rushed pell-mell to the boiler deck and huddled together. The steamer grazed the pier, crushing her smith shop, barber shop, mess house, wheel house and wheel. A signal of distress was thrown out. The boat floated helplessly down the stream and struck the coal barges moored below, wrecking one so that the coal was thrown into the river to save the barge. The passengers all scrambled off on to the coal barges without injury except in torn clothing, scratched hands and faces and slight bruises to some of them. There was a panic at the moment, but no one jumped overboard. The time betweed striking the pier and colliding with the coal fleet was very brief, which was a fortunate circumstance. It was a very narrow escape from a frightful casualty. Two seconds hesitation of the captain at the wheel would have been sufficient to cutting the boat in two and losing the lives of nearly all on board.

Ready Made Angels.

"Some queer characters? Well, I should say so. We meet more oddities in this business than you would believe, and see a side of human nature that is not shown up in any trade that I know of."

The remark came from an old marble-cutter, who was busily engaged recently in chipping out a ferocious looking animal, presumably a lamb, on a flat slab of snowy marble. The lamb stood out in relief, and in its unfinished condition bore a strong resemblance to a hump-backed buffalo in pantaloons.

"That stone," said the man, as he carefully dug out the lamb's eye with the point of a delicate tool, "was ordered by a woman who is a character in herself. Her husband died nearly three years ago. She came to me last Monday week, and spent just five hours in giving her order. I had just finished chiseling out a beautiful figure of an angel when she came into the yard. She has a thin, vinegarish face, a squeaky voice, and a pair of eyes looking two ways for Sunday."

"'What'll it cost?' says she, 'to have a headstone made for my ole man? He's been dead goin' on three years now, and his folks are complainin' because I hain't had it done before. To tell the truth he didn't deserve it. He was the all-tiredest meanest man you ever see. Still, it's got to be done, and I wish it as cheap as possible. Now what'll it be with his name and some words on it?'

"'Well, madame,' said I, it all depends on what kind of a headstone you want—the size, the lettering, and the amount of labor required. I can get up a very nice stone with a ready-made angel or an All Seeing Eye, for about $35. But if you want a first-class angel, long wings, flowing robe, and carved out in the highest style of art, it will cost a good deal more. Or if you want a nice lamb lying down or standing up, or a——'

"'Now look here, said the woman, getting angry all of a sudden, 'who said anything about lambs or angels or any such trash? I just want what I told you, something good and cheap.'

"So we argued for an hour, until she finally made up her mind' to have a foot stone, with a lamb at the top.

"'That's only to please his old maid sisters,' said she, as sour like as you could imagine, 'for he wasn't any more like a lamb than I'm like a lion.'

"But, pshaw!" continued the maker of tombstones and epitaphs, "there's lots more like her, only worse. Some of them want one thing and some another. It's a little curious, too, how long people wait before they think of marking the resting-place of their dead. A year is probably the shortest time at the outside. Two years, ordinarily, and sometimes half a dozen, before it is thought of. Then they go to the marble cutter and haggle about the price. The first idea is to have a monument, but usually they end with a five foot headstone and a ready-made angel."

Millions of Tons of Salt.

Saline Valley, Inyo county, is one of the most remarkable places in California. It is simply an immense basin, say twelve by twenty-five miles in size, surrounded on all sides with great mountains. At the lowest point of depression is found some 1,200 acres of pure salt—millions of tons of it, glistening like crusted snow. Bordering on this on all sides, except the west, come miles square of sandy, dusty lands, caustic, with alkali, borax or similar deposits.

An Indian Queen.

A writer from Mandalay East India, gives the following account of a visit to the Queen and Royal Palace. I would not risk the bullock cart again, but was carried in my long rattan chair—it might have been an open palanquin—and was very nice and easy. My husband, rode beside me along the road to the convent, which for some three miles is very pretty and there is abundant shade from the fine trees. Sister Teresa was waiting for us, as the Queen wished us to go early. My husband, however, had to go round to a shop near to buy some presents for her Majesty. That is de rigueur. He soon came back with a well-laden tray of china, glass, perfumes, etc., the best he could find, and then our cavalcade started—Sister Teresa and another nun, in their bullock carriage, he on his pony, and I in my chair carried by coolies. In about half an hour we came to the city wall—for we had only seen the suburbs so far. It is a high wall of red brick, battlemented, and a mile and a quarter square. We passed through a great gateway, and found ourselves in a crowded city, and soon after that at the palace gate. The palace again is enclosed by a high stockade about a half a mile square. There my husband had to leave me, as no men are allowed to enter the Queen's precincts. My heart sank within me a little. It occurred to me that perhaps they might not let me out again; that perhaps they might keep me as a hostage until they came to terms with our Government, and a host of other "mights" that my husband says only my "vivid imagination" could ever have conjured up. Once within the palace walls we were not allowed umbrellas, though the sun was very hot. Luckily, I had on a thick pith hat. The royal guards are a most comical looking set, some clothed and wearing shiny red helmets, others looking like mere coolies. They have a queer collection of old muskets in their guard-house—quite harmless, I believe—but they have some very nasty looking spears, long enough to run through three people at once. After a very little walking we come to some steps, and here we have to leave our shoes. This shoe question is a sore subject to Europeans, and has prevented most English ladies who have come to Mandalay from visiting the Queen. I don't know if any visited the last Queen, but they tell me no one has yet been to see this one. Now it really is not so bad to go a few yards in one's stockings, provided no indignity is meant by the exaction; one can put on two or more pairs of stockings, and even slip a thick cork sole inside—anything, provided no shoes are seen. We walked through several passages, and when at last we were inside the palace the first thing that fell upon my surprised ears was a "Good morning, Mrs. Rowett," from a cheerful English voice. The speaker turned out to be a lady of the "Gamp" sisterhood, who came here a few months ago to attend the Queen. She was considered in Rangoon to be doing a very risky thing, and possibly, if any mishap occurred to the mother of the child, it might have proved so. As it was, all went well, and the pluck of our "Gamp," a very un-Gamp like woman, I must say, is rewarded by a salary of £50 a month, a permanent place, and a profusion of princely gifts. I found her barefooted, of course, but blazing in diamonds. Earrings, brooches, and rings adorned her person, and a quantity of splendid silks and velvets were displayed to me from her boxes. It was a great comfort to be able to rest at my ease in her room, and to hear all her gossip was most amusing. I was there about an hour. We were then called to the throne-room, and had another hour there before the Queen came. A bevy of princesses and maids of honor came and sat with us, on the floor, of course, and seemed anxious to have a look at the foreigner. They were very courteous to me, chatting constantly through the medium of the sister who came with the superior, a perfect Burmese scholar. They asked me many personal questions, including my age, which, if they were credulous, they now know to within ten years. They were all very richly dressed in the usual Burmese costume. First comes the tamein or shirt, which is very tightly girt round the hips, but flows more loosely at the feet, the trails slightly behind. Those worn on this occasion were alike tasteful though very gorgeous. With that a fine cambric loose jacket, open front, and disclosing a bright-colored silk band, reaching from the waist to the armpits like a very broad sash. This arrangement produces the effect of a European square bodice, and leaves enough of the neck bare to show to advantage the mass of splendid pearls, rubies, and diamonds which every one of these lucky dames possesses. The jackets have tight sleeves, which have to be worked on over the hand like long kid gloves, and in fashionable society they are made so long as to form wrinkles from the elbow to the wrist. The hair is dressed with scrupulous neatness, a la Chineise, with a thick coil at the back, relieved always with a few fresh flowers,

The Queen's Love.

Few, if any readers of English history have doubted that Queen Elizabeth, "the maiden Queen," loved the chivalric Earl of Essex. Her's was a wild, infatuated love, such as the "glorious sorceress of the Nile" bore for her Mark Antony. She, a Queen upon whose head the crown of England sat nobly, made love to one of her courtiers—a favorite.

One night Elizabeth sat in her royal chamber, her head bowed upon the finely-covered table and the folds of her gorgeous night drapery hanging loosely around her. A light rap startled the queen from her reverie. She raised her head, brushed back her silver-threaded hair, and asked who wished admittance at such an hour.

"Annette," was the reply.

"Ah, my chambermaid," said the queen, as she opened the door, and a buxom lass, with bright eyes, raven tresses, entered and courtisied most gracefully. "Thou art welcome, Good Annette, but methinks thou comest late."

"There is a man at the wicket gate, my lady," replied the girl.

"Annette, a man?"

"Yes, my lady."

"'Tis an unreasonable hour for a visit but did he state his business?"

"He said he wished to see the queen."

"Knowest thou his name, Annette?" and the queen gazed into her maid's face rather searchingly.

"Yes, my lady; it is Essex."

"Then admit him at once."

"Into the reception room, mistress?"

"No, here."

Annette was dumbfounded, for never before had a man entered the private chamber of the queen.

Elizabeth looked at the wondering girl a moment, when, seeming to guess the cause of her wonderment, said:

"Thou needst not wonder, Annette; he comes on business pertaining to the kingdom. Admit him."

The maid courtisied and withdrew.

The queen now dressed herself hastily and sat down to await her visitor.

Soon the door was pushed open, and handsome, gallant Essex entered. He approached the queen and grasped the extended hands.

Annette now prudently withdrew, and England's mighty sovereign and her lover were alone.

They talked for a long time and words which breathed of love were spoken. Ah! little thought Essex, then, that the hand he was covering with kisses, would, ere many months, sign his death warrant.

As the tower clock tolled the hour of midnight the courtier arose to depart. The queen drew a costly ring from her finger and placed it on his hand, saying, "Noble Essex, if troubles of State envelop thee, return this ring, and thou shalt not be forgotten."

The earl again raised her hands to his lips, and took his departure, Annette appearing to conduct him to the street. As the door closed upon Essex's stately form, Elizabeth threw herself upon the rich couch and sobbed aloud:

"Oh, what a love I have for thee, noble Essex; yet I can never call thee mine;" and while she yet lay there sobbing, the lover earl was traversing the moonlit streets, gazing upon the ring—the queen's talisman.

Reader, is it not great to be the lover of a queen?

A different scene was not long afterward enacted in the same room. A dozen courtiers stood around the same queen—Essex's lover—as she sat before a table to affix her royal signature to a document that lay before her. Her eyes wandered uneasily over it, and her bosom rose and fell with emotion. The document before her was the death warrant of Essex. He had been drawn into a plot by some nobles and his own rashness, and now lay in prison. Why did not she sign the death warrant?

She thought of the ring she had given Essex, and every moment she expected to see the royal talisman brought to her. The nobles grew very impatient and one asked:

"Why does not the queen sign?"

That broke the stillness, aroused the queen, and with an unsteady hand she signed the death warrant. The deed was done—her lover must die.

After the execution of Essex the queen grew peevish and retiring, and was often heard sobbing in her apartments. The missing ring was a mystery. She had dispatched a trusty person to examine the body of Essex, but the ring was not found thereon.

But at last it came to light. One day a messenger arrived in great haste at the palace with the tidings that the Countess of Nottingham was dying and desired to see the queen. The queen hastened to her and as she approached the death couch, the countess drew a ring from her bosom and held it up. The queen sprang forward, tore the well known bauble from the trembling hand, and in a loud voice demanded how it came into the possession of the countess. Then the dying woman told her. Poor Essex, when arrested remembered the injunction of the royal lover, gave the ring to the countess, begging her to convey it to the queen. But her husband, a bitter enemy of the earl's, persuaded her to keep it. Had she obeyed the imprisoned earl, in all probability would have been saved.

The countess implored the queen to forgive her, but with the fury of an enraged tigress, the queen sprang forward, violently grasping the dying woman, saying:—"May God forgive you—I never can!" and immediately left the room. From that moment the queen sank rapidly, and died at Richmond in 1603, just two years after the death of Essex."

Beer in Japan.

The art of brewing good beer is making fast progress in Japan. For a number of years the people have contented themselves with an imported article, but they afterwards found that they could make better beer themselves, and so have undertaken the task. The industry has already become a considerable one, the largest two establishments being known respectively as the Shimidzupa Shokwai and the Hakkosha breweries. The beer they turn out is said to be far more wholesome than the foreign article, and to be excellent in its taste. The sale is fast increasing.

Fishing With Lamps.

A French yachting paper gives some descriptions of the new aparatus which is being used with the permission of the government of that country for fishing by electricity at night. It consists of a globe of glass within which the electric light is shown. Two conductors, incased in gutta-percha, are arranged so as to meet one another on the inside, very much on the same principle which is now familiar to all visitors to the Crystal Palace, London. They communicate with a fishing boat anchored at a convenient distance, and can, of course, be set into activity by the occupants of the boat. As to the globe, it is attached to a weight below and a float above, so that it can be raised or lowered to the desired depth. As soon as the carbons are ignited and the glass in proper position all the sea in its vicinity is illuminated brilliantly, and the fish, over whom light is well known to exercise an irresistible influence at night, come eagerly, and sometimes in large shoals, within the rays. They may be seen from above disporting themselves in the unaccustomed brightness, and little dreaming of the sinister purpose with which the little fete is organized for them. It is then that other fishing-boats, armed with nets, come up and set to work at the unconscious victims, which they surround as well as they can without interfering with the light and globe. It may be supposed that this device is calculated to operate with much deadly effect whenever it is used; and there seems to be much doubt whether it will ever be allowed as a recognized kind of fishing within territorial waters. Indeed, the license granted by the government is said to be merely provisional, and for the purpose of testing the new machine.

Floor Covering.

Carpets now show improvement in styles and patterns. Small figures are in demand, and, in fact, large ones can not be found in the stores where ancient stock is not kept. There was a time when a room of of the ordinary flat size wouldn't show a single figure complete. In some of the patterns now shown small designs are crowded together in wonderful harmony of color and device. Many a treasured old tapestry has less art than the ordinary carpeting of the present day. Some are veritable pictures and can be studied for hours without growing familiar. Some of the favorite designs represent ferns, leaves branches and foliage in symmetrical entanglement. Borders are still used and often are wholly different from the body, though harmonizing with it. A feature of our carpet stores just now is the display of Oriental mattings. Not only are they bought to put down in summer residences, but they are coming into use in chambers of city houses. A bed room provided with white China matting, with a half breadth of colored check for a border, and a Turkish rug in the centre, is quite correct. Another thing for the centre of a sleeping room, if the sleeper be an unmarried woman, is a small bed. This is a bran new affectation. A brass bedstead, a trifle larger than the woman and not much wider than her greatest breadth, is placed in the middle of the apartment and furnished with the dantiest possible bed clothes; but everything about the affair must be perfectly plain, the desire being to suggest the utmost simplicity on the part of the maiden. Sometimes a cot is used, and, if the occupant be a light weight, she selects a structure of frail design, so as to prove how airy and fairy she is.

The Folded Corner.

A gentleman traveling in Holland relates this experience: "The first time I dined at the house of a lady she said: 'If you make a mark in your serviette I will have it put aside, to be ready when you come again.' I thanked her, and turned down the corner of my dinner napkin, wondering a little that people who had a dinner en famille of five courses and a lavish dessert should be saving as to retain a guest's serviette for another time. On my return to the house where I was staying I mentioned the circumstance, and then it was explained. It was merely a delicate way of telling me that she meant frequently to invite me again. I dined there many times, but I never saw the serviette with the folded corner any more."

The Crops.

The June report of the Department of Agriculture shows a decrease of 2.7 per cent. in the area of spring wheat, compared with last year. In oats there is an increased area of 7 per cent. and in barley of one per cent. The condition of nearly all the grains except corn is good; the average yield of winter and spring wheat throughout the United States is estimated at 13 bushels per acre.

The crop reports from Southern Minnesota and Dakota continue to be encouraging as regards the smaller grains, and are more favorable as regards to corn, the weather having grown warmer.

Kidd's Gold.

A bill has been introduced into Congress, granting permission to Fenton Sherwood, George Teneyck and William Lewis to dig in the government grounds at West Point for the treasure said to have been buried there by Captain Kidd. These men claim they are able to locate the buried wealth and only want the assurance that when it is found it would be theirs. They had written to the Secretary of War, but were told that, in the absence of legislation, if they succeeded in unearthing the treasure it would belong to the government. Under the bill it will belong to them, provided they find it. Some years ago a company was formed to make the search, but failed after expending the sum of $150.000. Their search was made at a point eight miles below West Point.

Congressional Convention.

A convention of the Democratic and Conservative party of the Seventh Congressional District is hereby called to meet in Gadsden on the 10th day of of August, 1882, at 12 o'clock M., for the purpose of nominating a candidate to represent said District in the 48th Congress. JOHN H DISQUE,
Chairman Congressional Ex. Com.

Go out and bear the discussion of the questions of the day.

Let the good work of posting the people on the issues of the day go on. They deserve to be fully posted.

Let come what will, the Representatives of Calhoun in both Houses, will betrue to the people of Calhoun.

Let the world know how you stand. This is a free country, and if you do not stand wrong, you need not be afrid for the world to know your status.

The Independent Greenback candidates did not stop here one night. They thought they could do more for their party at Anniston, which was saying little for Anniston.

Pursuant to announcement by posters, which were put up by the leader of the Radical party in this county. Hon. C. P. Lane, candidate for Attorney General on the Greenback Independent ticket, and Col. Carpenter, from Jefferson county, addressed the people of this section at the court house, Tuesday. Col. Carpenter opened the debate. He soon convinced his crowd that, fortunately for the Democratic party, he had never agreed with it, even before the war; but yet he claimed to be a Democrat, and then he stated his claim to this honor so positively that he disgusted the negroes who went to hear him and who expected a Radical speech. He consumed an hour on the election law and the convict question, both of which the Democratic party have in charge, and which will be arranged satisfactorily by the next Legislature without the help of Col. Carpenter and his sort.

He was followed by Mr. Lane. Mr. Lane was kind enough to tell us that he had been raised up as a Whig and never overliked the Democratic party. He was young and enthusiastic, however, and with the four votes he has cast since reaching his majority, he has tried to reform the party. Strange to say, the Democratic party had a policy to which Mr. Lane was opposed, and hence his opposition. The result of the two speeches, coupled with the able reply of Col. Caldwell, was good to the Democratic party of this section. The negroes are free to say that they will not support them. They will support General O'Neal rather. And they are right. We do not know that anybody else will come along. If they do not, Calhoun may be counted quite solid for the Democrats.

We hope that Messrs Lane and Carpenter will find time to visit Jacksonville and Anniston again. As it is, if they don't come again, the ticket they represent may get 25 votes. If they will come again, it is quite likely it would be largely reduced. They are good men to send out—for the Democratic party.

Bill and Dogberry on a Trip.

On the morning of the 10th inst. Capt W. H. Cooper, and myself took our seat behind his Tennessee colt—Tom, for the ostensible purpose of making a tour through the counties of Calhoun, Talladega, and St. Clair

Our separate parts were specifically defined. Mr. Cooper, was that of selling the Improved Magnolia Gullet Gin, whilst mine was that of making faces at all the slouchy girls and bad boys and give my unqualified sanction to all the wonderful tales that Bill could tell.

We succeeded in our different calling beyond our most sanguine expectations. In passing down toward Anniston the first object that excited especial enquiry was on the farm of Capt. W. F. Bash and the most remarkable of these were the abscence of big cotton fields but in lieu therof. I saw mow after mow of neatly constructed cocks of Alfalfa covered with tarpauline which gave the field a picturesque appearancee His clover and his hay fields, his corn and his watermellons, his cotswool sheep and other improved stock show a happy departure from the abused system of "all cotton." We are creditably informed that Capt. Bush is rapidly gaining money under his new experiments. Success Captain, and may your zealous efforts be crowned with happiest results. We then came to Anniston Iron Co's coaling. There we saw acre after acre of as fine pastures as one could wish to see. The few cattle browsing on this spacious expanse were as fat as mud. Here is an enterprise that ere long, will attract the attention of the business man and prove both profitable and pleasant. Situated in the midst of these coalings we found Mr. Woodward Leatherwood to whom Mr. Cooper, engaged a gin, it being noon and Mr. Leatherwood placing his fine well of cold water at our disposal, we concluded to shuck. I unharnessed watered and fed Tom was drawing a bucket of water, when Mr Coopor, in the magnanimity of his big heart, stepped forward and insisted that he should do a part of the hard work, that I could sit down and open the cans of fish. This was rather a damper on me as I had a new two dollar knife, but feeling proud of Bill's tender friendship, I ripped open the boxes regardless of consequences.

I caught Bill slyly watching this operation which gave me the first suspicion that all was not right, this I kept in memory and if I mistake not, we both came home with badly abused knifes The remainder of the evening passed quickly away as we sped along eight miles to the hour behind Tom. Night brought us to the residence of Mr. Jno. Wilson on the banks of Choccolocco. What must I say of this happy prosperous little household.

We say this the 10th night of July will always remain green in our memory and as the Oasis, in the Desert of Sahara, rise up and gladden the heart of the weary traveler. So shall your hospitable roof rise up in memory and cheer us in lifes journey. May God continue to bless and prosper you is our prayer.

Bidding this little family good-bye we drove over to the Alapama Furnace. As every body knows something of this manufactory and its system of labor, it is needless for me to mention it. more than to say, since the change of the proprietorship, the convicts are much better used and are working cheerfully and contentedly. Doubtless these convicts are in a great measure, indebted to the kind sympathy and timely interference of the Republican. By some, you are still censured, but the philanthropic will rise up in the future, and call you blessed for your zealous efforts in behalf of these poor unfortunates We from the furnace directed our way to the seocial little town of Munford, where we pleasantly spent a couple of hours in the parlor of one of her good citizens. It is needless to say, that parlor was graced by a couple of intelligent witty young ladies. We reluctantly bade them goodbye and went inquest of Gin men. Very soon we met Maj. Jemison, (Shack as he is familiarly known) Mr. Cooper immediately droped into the merits of the Gullet Gin, and was made happy by the promise of an early order. We then wended our way down Choccolocco. nothing occurring more than the sale of an other Gin till we came to Capt. J. M. Hughey's where we lunched smoked and drank from an ice cold spring. Very soon we were joined by Jim Richey, Capt. Hughey, and his sons. As they are gentlemen of enterprise push, they immediately enquired whom were we and what was our business. Then Bill stood up like a man and boldly, fearlessly and with dignity declared himself the factotum representative of the Gillet Gin M. F. G. Co. This proved the cabalistic reasons to mutual good feeling and an interchange of experiments, trials disappointments and &c, cemented us in bonds of keen sympathy We found those gentlemen thoroughly alive to the demands of the times, introducing on their farms, improved machinery and using largely of Guano, and compost. Leaving the pleasant affable gentlemen we drove down to Eastaboga, from there down the Talladega Road in the neighborhood of Ed Turners, spending the night with Mr Best. The early morning found us again on the road, crossing Choccauhan (read this as I spell it) Mr. Cooper, against my earnest protestations would cross to a beautifully situated residence, surrounded by a magnificent grove. His reasons are best known to himself, but of one thing I'm shure there was no Gin house there.

It would require too much time and space to give all our wandering throughout Talladega Co. The prospects for a big corn crop has not been so flattering since the war. Their cotton is small will make but little over half crop. This is attributable to their failing to use Guano. We crossed Coosa river, at Kerrysville, shaping our course down Coosa Valley St. Clair Co. We spent only one night among those hospitable people and that at the house of S. P. Mel's Here again we spent a most enjoyable evening in various parlor games and an occasional conversation, in fact we so far forgot ourselves that ere we knew it, our watches were pointing to the "wee small hours of the night." Next morning we turned our faces homeward, arriving at Maj. Phil Coopers about 12 o'clock in the night, quickly betakening ourselves to bed, and there in the in the close embrace of the god Morphens we reveled in the fairy land of dreams, untill the family had breakfasted, they all unconscious that Bill and Dogberry were nursing an appetite unappeased since the day before noon. but we were amply rewarded with a nice cosy little breakfast, presided over by the fair and accomplished Miss. Allen, who did the honors of the table with an ease of grace suavity of manners, whilst the air was made redolent with the sweet strains of song from Miss Annie. After enjoying our needs for a while and looking over Maj. Cooper's improved reapers. mowers, plows and &c we started on a tour of inspection over the Cooper farm. First we passed through sixty acres of clover then came "Bills" thirty acres of corn which can't possibly make less than 1200 bushels. This he assures me did not cost exceeding $30. There came the Maj's corn, millet, and cotton. I refrain from any comments. but will give a rough estimate—three thousand bushels corn, one hundred and twenty-five bales cotton. I leave the results to other hands and betake myself to my own Log cabin in the Lane, where none dare molest nor make me afraid."

A negro suspected of having varoiloid was taken to the pest house yesterday, being the second case in twenty-six days.

It requires some grace to say an humble place is the place for me, and if it be God's will I prefer it; the humblest work is the humblest work is the work for me, and by his grace I will do it. Do we ever consider what Christ meant when he washed his disciples feet?

Beyond all credulity is the credulousness of atheists, who believe that chance could make the world, when it cannot build a house.

PERRY DAVIS' VEGETABLE PAIN KILLER

A Never-Failing Cure for Burns, Scalds, Bruises, Cuts, Sores, etc.

After forty years of trial, Perry Davis' Pain Killer stands unrivaled. It is safe! It acts immediately! It never fails!

Editor of the St. John (N. B.) News, says: In flesh wounds, aches, pains, sores, etc., it is the most effectual remedy we know of. No family should be without a bottle of it for a single hour.

From the Cincinnati Dispatch: We have seen its magic effects, and know it to be a good article.

From I. S. Potter, U. S. Consul at Crefeld, Rhenish Prussia: After long years of use, I am satisfied it is positively efficient as a healing remedy for wounds, bruises, and sprains.

W. W. Sharper, Valdosta, Ga., says: It is a panacea for all bruises and burns.

From R. W. Adams, Saco, Me.: It gave me immediate relief.

R. Lewis says: In forty years' use it never has failed me.

W. W. Lum, Nicholville, N. Y., says: I use your Pain Killer frequently. It relieves pain and soreness, and heals wounds like magic.

J. W. Dee says: For scalds and burns it has no equal.

Perry Davis' Pain Killer is not a new untried remedy. For forty years it has been in constant use; and those who have used it the longest are its best friends.

Its success is entirely because of its merit. Every family should have a bottle ready for use. Much pain and heavy doctors' bills may often be saved by prompt application of the Pain Killer. Unlike most medicines, it is perfectly safe even in the hands of a child. Try it once thoroughly, and it will prove its value. Your druggist has it at 25c., 50c., and $1.00 per bottle. PERRY DAVIS & SON, Proprietors, Providence, R. I.

Our Mobile visitors, are loud in their praises of our climate and scenery.

Our very good friend; Mr. John Archer, has our thanks for the lot of fine apples sent us.

Attention is directed to the announcement of James H. Savage, Esq., to be found in another column.

Attention is directed to the notice of A. A. Weaver. His stock of Undertaker's goods has never been eclipsed in this market.

We return thanks to Mrs. Annie Alexander for a number of bunches of most delicious grapes, the production of her lovely home place in Jacksonville.

Mrs. Hamilton, Mrs. Crampton and Miss Crane, all of Mobile, are seeking health and pleasure in Jacksonville.

July was the month in which to grade the square. It has been put off to August, owing to the lateness of the season.

The scheme for working the public roads, as hinted at in these columns, is not fully understood. In a future issue we will explain it fully.

The Teachers Institute was in session here, Tuesday, Wednesday and Thursday. Owing to the disagreeable weather, the attendance was not large.

The improvements on the Baptist church are drawing to completion and it will soon be a very handsome building.

I will open school in the College building in September.

Mrs. Ida Woodward will continue in the primary department. Other arrangements will be made in due time and announced through the paper.

MARRIED—At Oxford, Ala, on Sunday, 6th inst., Mr. Thos. A. Best, late of Co. A. 8th Confederate Cavalry, to Miss Jennie Shuford, of Oxford.

We congratulate Mr. Best on carrying off so rich a prize.—the belle of Oxford, and she in turn, has in genial Tom a kind and affectionate husband, who will ever be to her a mainstay and protection Here's to thee Tom, and thy beautiful bride! Long life and sweet domestic felicity. That champagne is excellent.

Do not spend your time in talking scandal, nor sink your own moral nature by so doing, and you are, perhaps, doing great injustice to those about whom you talk. You, perhaps, do not understand, or would, doubtless, be more lenient.

Hon. L. W. Grant, the brilliant editor of that veteran Democratic paper, the Jacksonville Republican deposited his fiddle boxes, which by editorial courtesy the "Press" of the State denominate feet, on our mantle piece and spit our paste pot full of tobacco juice Monday evening last. His record as a member of the Legislature both House and Senate and pungent journalist is unexcelled. "Lon" belongs to Gadsden and some of these days he will return to his first love. Whenever he does we will kill the fatted calf, provided Ben Pope is in town—Gadsden News.

Altogether imaginary. Rather rough on Bro. Pope, though.

CROSS PLAINS LOCALS.

Rev. Mr. Smith preached at the Episcopal church last sabbath.

Mrs. M. L. Becton of Selma, and Miss. Lou Woolf of Lidon, has been visiting friends in town.

Mr D. C. Savage and family have returned home from Blount County.

Our old friend W. W. West, of Camden, but more recently of Selma, shook our hand last Friday, and spent two or three days with us. It was a pleasure to hear from old friends and talk over old times. Mr. West, is a genial and accomplished gentlemen.

The young men of our town and the surrounding neighborhood, have organized a military company unner the name of the Cross Plains Guards. At a meeting last Monday night the following officers were elected: W. W. Lindsey, Capt W. C. Savage, First Lieutenant; W. W. Little, Second Lieutenant; J. K. Dailey Third Lieutenant. The company has reported to the Governor of Alabama for enrollment with the military of the State This is a fine body of men numbering about fifty.

Capt. J. D. Hammond, candidate for the legislature gave a hand shaking here last Thursday, and also spoke to a very good crowd. The Captain showed a familiarity with all matters of interest to the people, as he touched upon all before he finished. He also promised, if elected, to watch the interests of the people closely.

At the urgent solicitation of many friends all over the county, our townsmen, Capt. J. H. Savage has offered his name to the people as a candidate for Representative in the next legislature. and will make a short and vigorous canvass of the county.

The Talladega Presbytery of the Cumberland Presbyterian Church will convene at this place on Thursday before the third Sabbath in August. This promises to be a very interesting occasion and no doubt, will be largely attended. If not done before this time. our Cumberland friends expect to have their beautiful house of worship dedicated then.

It it gratifying to your reporter to note the success of any worthy enterprise, and more particularly, if it is a home enterprise. I suppose every body will be glad to hear that Mr. R. P. Morgan is pushed to keep up with his custom.

The wheat is pouring in from all directions and his mill is taxed to the utmost. This is as it should be. By patronizing home enterprise we build up our town.

OCCASIONAL.

ALEXANDRIA LOCALS.

It seems from the locals that have appeared in this paper, from week to week, that there are some who wish to picture this valley as the most inviting clime on on earth. If such be the idea that they wish to convey, we most emphatically say that they are deceived and, with demonstrative truth for our shield, we declare that somewhere in a more southern clime there is a place more inviting by far. Because the Rose of Cashmere, that loveliest wanderer from the fairest spot on earth, lately made her appearance in our valley. And she surely found it to be wanting, for she has disappeared, wandering toward the South and it is now rumored that she will bloom, for a while, in unfading beauty among the Oxford flowers. Our brightest hopes, for the beauty of this valley, are waning and our proud spirits are drooping, because of the departure of this lovely Rose. And we long for the happy day which is fast approaching, when, it is said, that she will take up her abode in the town of Alexandria.

Mr W. L. Urquahart of Oxford was in town last week. He had decided to go North, but we pursuaded him that the climate was too cold at present.

The Misses Woods, of Talladega, and Miss Green, of Texas, are visiting relatives in this place. We hope they will have a pleasant time.

The Society of Seekers after the Golden Prize of Oratory made the Grange Hall resound with eloquence, on last Friday night. This society promises to be a success, since all the young men of our town have joined it, animated with an ardent spirit to make good debaters. We ask them to put forth herculean efforts in this direction. for the orator sways the most potent and perennial scepter on earth.

This valley is in the road of prosperity and we hope that it will give a more suitable reception to the fair Rose of Cashmere, when she returns.

A Tennessee Ground-Hog Story.

Tuscumbia Alabamian.

Messrs E. S. Early and S. E. Hines, who have just completed a sawmill in the mountains above Wolf Creek, East Tennessee, furnish the following particulars of a recent ground-hog hunt: A few mornings ago a man living near Wolf Creek was attracted by the barking of his dogs, and, going to where they had treed a ground-hog on the side of the mountain, he found him in a hollow log with the entrance lying up hill He procured a long pole to reach the game, but this being too short he crawled in to lengthen the pole, and hung his toes over the end of the log. In this position he lost his hold and down he went in the log on top of the ground-hog, and a lively fight began, The man's superior strength prevailed, but not till he had been bitten in eleven places and badly scratched and scarred. But the trouble had not ended, but the man had, and wrong end down at that; he could not crawl backward up hill, so he was a prisoner in a critical, not to say ridiculous, position, with no means of escape. Fortunately, at this frightful juncture the family became uneasy, and went out to see what had happened, and were horrified at the discovery. Finally, after a round of cursing, praying and crying, the victim was cut out of the log, "set right side up," clothed and in his right mind, but the ground-hog was dead.

Georgia Items.

A negro man was shot dead in a peach orchard in Sparta one day last week. Since then not a peach has been missed from any orchard in that neighborhood.

Sore eyes are common throughout Georgia this month. Some people attribute the malady to the swarms of black knats that pervade all sections of the country.

In Augusta, the other day a colored woman, named Sue Jenkins, was wheeling around the streets a dead child, lying by the side of a. living one, in a small carriage propelled by the Mother, and, in addition to the two in the carriage, who were twins, she was leading another about eighteen months old. An investigation proved that the child came to its death from starvation and neglect; that the mother was demented and unable to provide proper nourishment for her offspring.

The Smallest Pony in the World.

From the Savannah, Ga., Times.

Through the kindness of Mr. Henry Y. Ferrell, the well known veterinary surgeon of Randolph street, we were presented, on last Saturday, with what we beleive to be the smallest pony in the world. It was born at his stables a few days ago, and is from the stock of Mexican ponies, which were recently brought to our city. It is not quite four inches in length, and strangest feature of the little curiosity is that it is remarkably well developed for one of its diminutive size. Its head, ears, back legs and tail are all perfect, and even the hoof and frog of the foot is already formed.

A Big Potato

Chattanooga Times.

We have before us a curiosity in the form of an immense Irish potato of the Early Rose variety, raised by our friend Dr. T. H. Roddy, of Ooltewah, James county. It embodies six potatoes, each larger than a stout man's fist, which have grown together with ligatures as large as one,s wrist, so that they virtually form but one. It is perhaps not quite so large as the potato we have all heard about, which it required the combined labor of two men and a boy to dig, but we are sure that it is quite a match for the one of which it has been said that six men could stand around it, and would feed at least that number, unless they should be particularly hungry for esculent roots of this species. Dr. Roddy, informs us that the planting of one half bushel yielded twenty bushels.

Fresh Fruit the Year Round.

MESSRS. TATUM, SIMS & Co., Opelika, Ala., have a preparation, splendidly indorsed, for keeping fruits, grapes, eggs, vegetables, etc., in a perfectly fresh and healthful condition for over 12 months, —without any cutting, heating, canning or peeling. Fruits &c. saved for ten cents a bushel. Recipes for making the preparation one dollar. Honorable citizens, prominent officers, endorse them. Write them for particulars, agents terms, &c., Opelika, Ala.

Mr D. R. McCurry exhibited to us yesterday a sample of the syrup made from watermellon juice, at his place near Rome. It was of a rich light color, thick as honey, and with some acidity in its sweetness. Mr. McCurry thinks that the acidity can be neutralized by a little lime or soda, and will try in the next syrup he makes. He estimates that a gallon of thick syrup can be be made from fourteen gallons of watermellon juice. —Rome. Courier.

Few persons possess talent of any kind unconsciously. It seems designed by the Creator that the very sense of capacity should urge genius to fulfil its mission, and support its early, and lonely efforts by the earnest conviction of ultimate success.

No school is more necessary to children than patience, because either the will must be broken, in childhood, or the heart in old age.

I never listen to calumnies, because if they are untrue, I run the risk of being deceived; and if they be true, of hating persons not worth thinking about.

We should never go in the way of temptation for the puopose of trying the strength of our virtues. If Achan handles the golden wedge his next work will be to steal it.

TATE SPRINGS.

Health and Pleasure for Alabamians.

Already fourteen States are represented by the guests in attendance at Tate Springs, East Tennessee. A good company has been there all winter and has rapidly increased since the 1st of March. The demand for the water has doubled in the past six months, and is being shipped now to all points of the union at the rate of 2,000 bbls. per. annum. We have seen no natural mineral water so strongly endorsed as a remedial agent for dyspepsia and diseases of the liver, stomach, bowels and kidneys. Our doctors prescribe it and hundreds in Alabama are daily drinking the water at home and can attest its power over disease. When the summer travel sets in, more of our Alabama "summer resorters" will be found at Tate Springs than at any other resort outside of the State. Dr. J. S. Weatherly of Montgomery, is resident physician. The new building is all complete and furnished. Send for for large 40 page pamphlet containing full information on all points. Messrs. Tomlinson & Ragsdale, proprietors, will promptly answer all inquiries. jul0

QUICK AND GOOD WORK AND FINE SAMPLE.

TESTIMONIALS.

ALEXANDRIA, ALA, Dec. 15, 1880.

Messrs. Berrys & Co., Rome, Ga.,

DEAR SIRS: In reply to your enquiry, I will say the sixty saw Light Draft Gullett Gin bought of you last fall gives perfect satisfaction. I have been ginning seventeen years, and I have yet to see a Gin that makes as good a sample from dirty cotton as the Gullett. The feeder works perfectly in every respect. I would not have a gin without one

W. PHIL COOPER.

GRIFFIN, GA., March 1, 1879.

We, the undersigned are using the Gullett Improved Light Draft Cotton Gin. The Gin is of superior workmanship. For fast ginning, safety in running, and light draft, (to do the same work,) we think it has no equal; but the most important feature is the attachment for opening and improving the sample. The best cotton is improved by it so as to bring form ½ to ¼ cent, and stained and dirty cotton from ½ to 1 cent per pound more in market than other Gins.

ROME, GA., March 7th, 1881.

We, the undersigned buyers and shippers of cotton in Rome, Georgia, take pleasure in recommending the new Improved Light Draft Gullett Gin as the best Gin known to us, for the reason that it turns out smoother and cleaner cotton with less nap, and consequently is worth more money.

MANHOOD

How Lost, How Restored.

Just published, a new edition of Dr Culverwell's Celebrated Essay on the radical cure of SPERMATORRHŒA or Seminal Weakness, Involuntary Seminal Losses, Impotency, Mental and physical Incapacity, Impediments to marriage, etc; also, CONSUMPTION, EPILEPSY and FITS, induced by self-indulgence or sexual extravagance, &c.

The celebrated author, in this admirable Essay clearly demonstrates, from a thirty year's successful practice, that the alarming consequences of self-abuse may be radically cured, pointing out a mode of cure at once simple, certain, and effectual, by means of which every sufferer, no matter what his condition may be, may cure himself cheaply, privately and radically.

enefit gained paration than od given. The achines for cutrmers not only to ery short lengths but o tear them to pieces, aking the silicious, hard acilitating digestion, The ting all long food are nu-ild among the benefits
k and hand any method that the cattle is an actual gain.
Prepared food is more easily masticated and digested, is more palatable, and affords nourishment according to the attention given it. By cutting and preparing food the inferior kinds can be given along with the best, and mixtures can be made to suit the different grades of stock. Cornstalks have not been regarded as of special value on the farm except to add bulk to the manure heap. Even if fed alone, after being well cut, they are not as nourishing as other food; but, if saved and kept in the barn in good, bright condition, they can utilized by the aid of the cutter and be made to fill the bill of fare, which often runs short of material before the winter is over. Many farmers feed their animals liberally with ground grain, using hay and straw more for the purposes of distension and bulk than for quality, and it is on the farms where the grains are used that cut cornstalks can be made useful. When well cut and crushed they can be steamed or moistened with hot water until swollen, which renders them tender; but if the cattle are not accustomed to them they should be sprinkled with meal and a little salt. Finely cut and mixed with pulpy roots they are relished by cattle at all times. Another saving, which more than balances the labor required for cutting, is the value of cut food to the manure heap. The refuse of cut stalks, straw, hay, etc., should be used for the absorption of liquids. Straw and inferior hay, should be left in the trough after feeding, is in a better condition for bedding than when fed in the entire state. The bed can be removed with greater ease, and being in fine condition, is added to the manure heap in that state, the result being a saving in the handling of the manure, a more thorough rotting and greater ease in its distribution over the fields. No farmer who has been accustomed to hauling coarse manure to the fields will object to the labor of the cutting when he once tries the ease and convenience of distributing manure that has been made from material that has passed through the cutter. It is almost barbarous to throw away corn fodder and straw by the bundle in the barnyards to be trampled upon and wasted by cattle, when by cutting it the stock will be willing to consume it, to say nothing of the cleanliness of the system, facility of handling, variety of preparation and nutritive properties gained. To this may be added the quickness of decomposition in the manure heap, fineness of material, and little liability of "fire-fanging," as well as the saving of the volatile gases that often escape from want of finely-divided absorbents.

GRAPE VINES.—There is one kind of fruit, and that, too, of a most delicious sort, that seems to grow and thrive in every part of the land, it only once started and given a "ghost of a ceance." It seems strange that so many of our farms have not a grape vine on them, and so many more have only a straggling vine or two, which yield but a tithe of what would be used, when the place might yield a ton a year and the room would never be missed. Now, in this good new year, will not every boy and girl take hold of the business, and see that a good vine is set, where it may run over the back porch, the old oak tree, the corn crib, the lattice by the garden wall; even the cow shed and pig sty need not be overlooked if your cuttings are abundant. It will cost so little and be worth so much. They will grow while you are sleeping, and pay back many fold all the care and labor they cost. They may be had from August until late frosts, if you will but take pains to secure varieties that come on in succession. There is scarcely any fruit more refreshing and beautiful, and the taste for it will grow by cultivation. Even those so addicted to pork and potatoes that they look with contempt on all sorts of "green stuff," might in time come to possess a more refined and wholesome taste by daily use of these inviting purple clusters, an end much to be desired both for their moral and physical well being.

LIMA BEANS.—Lima beans should be planted in rows four feet apart, and the hills two or three apart in the rows. Cultivate and hoe lightly, but allow no weed to grow. Let no other plants of any kind be near them. Limas want rich land to above all they want plenty of room, plenty of sun and no weeds. Plant the beans as early as the soil can be got warm and mellow. Put five or six of the beans in each hill, and cover one or two inches deep. The poles should be six or seven feet long, and put firmly in the ground 18 inches to two feet deep, which is best done before planting the beans.

CROWS AND CORN.—Farmers who complain of the crow pulling up freshly-planted corn should effectually protect their crop by scattering on two or three occasions half a peck or more of soaked corn over an adjoining newly-plowed field, which would effectually divert their attention from the planted field. Neither crows nor blackbirds can eat hard corn, and that is the reason the soft corn in the ground is disturbed.

THE selling of calves when but a few days old is a loss to the farmer. The milk is ropy and unfit to be sold, while the calves should not be sent to the butcher at that age to be used as food. The loss to the farmer or dairyman arises from the fact that calves make very rapid growth when young, and will pay for themselves handsomely if kept until they are really fit for veal.

THE following remedy and preventive of chicken cholera is highly recommended as a sure thing: Permanganate of potash and chlorate of potash, of each 10 grains. Mix in one powder and dissolve in water enough to mix a quart of feed. This will be enough for twenty to thirty chickens, to be given several times during the spring.

SUMAC.—The sumac business has been an important business in Virginia for several years. Sumac is used for tanning. It grows spontaneously, and at certain seasons nearly all classes engage in gathering it from the fields, as it is a nuisance in some localities. It sells readily at from $20 to $30 per ton, according to quality.

CORN is susceptible of more market changes than any other crop we produce, and can be bred to our fancy in shape, style and color very easily if we will give the care and attention necessary.

THE soil for radishes should be very light and rich. They grow fast and are able to keep out of the way of weeds. They can be grown in succession from the time frost leaves the ground till late in the fall.

DOMESTIC.

ROSE BUD CAKE.—White Part—One cup of butter, three cups of white sugar, five cups of flour, even full, one half teaspoonful of soda, whites of eight eggs beaten to a froth, and one teaspoonful of strawberry spence. Pink Part—Three cups of pink sugar, one cup of butter, one cup of sweet milk, four cups of flour, one teaspoonful of soda, two teaspoonfuls of cream tartar, sifted with the flour, whites of eight eggs; flavor strongly with rose. Bake in deep cake tin, in alternate layers of pink and white, finishing with the pink. Frosting for above—One cup of white sugar, enough water to dissolve it, set on the stove and let it boil until it will "hair," beat the white of an egg to a stiff froth, pour the heated sugar in the egg and stir briskly until cool enough to stay on the cake. The cake should be quite cold before it is iced. This icing will stick but not break.

BUTTERMILK AND DAISY CAKE.—One cup of fine white sugar and one-fourth cup of sifted flour, one-fourth cup of butter, half a cupful of sweet milk, whites of five eggs, quarter of a teacupful of soda, half a teaspoonful cream tartar mixed with the flour; flavor with orange. Yellow Part—Cream, half a teacupful of sugar and the same amount of butter very light, add half a cup of milk and the well-beaten yolks of four eggs, one cup of sifted flour, quarter of a teaspoonful of soda and half a teaspoonful of cream tartar sifted with the flour. Flavor with grated rind of a fresh lemon. Butter a deep cakepan and put in alternately a layer of white and of yellow dough, and when baked it will be in waves of yellow and white. Frost with the recipe given for clear icing, and ornament the edges with broken bits of yellow or white rock candy.

BEAN SOUP.—Soak one and one-half pints of beans in cold water over night. In the morning drain off the water, wash the beans in fresh water and put into a soup kettle with four quarts of good beef stock from which all the fat has been removed. Set it where it will boil slowly, but steadily till dinner, or three or four hours. Two hours before dinner slice in an onion and half a carrot. Strain with a colander and send to the table hot. The black bean and the red bean are better in soup than the white. The best of all is the large, round speckled bean, red and white, sometimes called "goose bean." It is said that the first seed was found in the crop of a wild goose, and planted in this country. It has since been one of the choicest of soup beans.

TOAD IN THE HOLE.—This is an English dish, and a good one says Miss Parlon, despite the unpleasant name. One pound of round steak, one pint of milk, one cupful of flour, one egg, and salt and pepper. Cut the steak into dice. Beat the egg very light; add milk to it, and then half a teaspoonful of salt. Pour upon the flour gradually, beating very light and smooth. Butter a two quart dish, and in it put the meat. Season well, and pour over it the batter. Bake an hour in a moderate oven. Serve hot. This dish can be made with mutton and lamb in place of steak.

LOBSTER SALAD.—Lobster is one of those things that will bear high seasoning. Pick the lobster carefully, keep the eggs or fruit, if there is any. Put away the picked lobster on the ice. Make the dressing with four yolks of eggs, raw and two hard boiled yolks. Rub perfectly smooth; and four tablespoonfuls of oil little by little, one tablespoonful of best mustard, and a dust of cayenne pepper, a tablespoonful of salt and black pepper. Mix all carefully and only before serving put dressing on the lobster; garnish with the lobster-fruit and a claw or so.

COFFEE CUSTARD.—Make a good strong extract of coffee—by dipping it as slowly as possible through a percolater; for ten people you will want two cupfuls; take eight of the same measures of milk, and beat into the milk the yolks of six eggs; add three ounces powdered sugar; mix into this the two cupfuls of coffee; as coffee differs in strength, taste to see that it is strong enough; pour the mixture into cups, and put the cups in a not too deep pan with boiling water; the level of the water ought not to stand higher than half the cup; do not boil the water too hard; about fifteen minutes of boiling is necessary.

HERE is an excellent recipe for marble cake, and the quantity named will make a large cake, or two good sized ones: For the dark part use one cup of butter, two cups of molasses, two cups of brown sugar, one cup of sour cream, five cups of flour, one teasponful each of soda, cloves, allspice, nutmeg and cinnamon, and the yolks of seven eggs. For the white part use the whites of seven eggs, one cup of butter, two of white sugar, half a cup of sweet milk, four cups of flour, and two teaspoontuls of baking powder. The cake can be baked in layers and put together with jelly, or you may put some of the white in the tin, and drop from a spoon some of the dark into it, and so on until the tin is full.

MUTTON SOUP.—Boil a leg of mutton from two to three hours and season with salt, pepper and about a tablespoonful of summer savory rubbed fine. Just before serving, add noodles made in this way: beat one egg light, add a pinch of salt and flour enough to make a stiff dough; roll out to a very thin sheet, dredge with flour to keep from sticking, then roll up tightly; begin at one end and shave down fine like cabbage for slaw.

SALAD OF SOUR ORANGES.—Slice half a dozen sour oranges; remove the seeds without breaking the slices; arrange them neatly on a salad dish or in a salad bowl; dust them lightly with cayenne pepper; pour over them three tablespoonfuls of salad oil and serve the salad with game or poultry.

A BRIGHT novelty for dessert are the candy "chips" of all colors and flavors that come in curled ringlets in pale pink ruby, silver white, orange and lemon color, with flavors as various as the tints. Served on a round china plate; they make a dainty morsel for crunching with black coffee.

PRETTY bands to be used in looping back lace curtains are made of the unbleached tissue which macreme lace is made; crochet in some loose and open work pattern the width and length you wish, finish with a shell edge, and draw through the open meshes ribbon of any color.

INDIAN POUND CAKE.—Two cups Indian meal, 1 cup of flour, 1 cup of milk, 2 teaspoonfuls of baking powder, 3 dessert spoonfuls of sugar, 1 egg, teaspoonful of lard. Bake in a dripping pan. To be eaten hot or fresh.

HUMOROUS.

"IF I was in your place," said a New Haven housewife to a fish peddler, "I'd throw away that horn or else learn a new tune. It's perfectly distressing." "Madame," said the purveyor of brain phosphorus, with becoming dignity, "with the limited time at my disposal, and the extreme low price of shad, it is impossible for me to favor my patrons with a cornet obligato on every street, but I try to make the few strains I submit acceptable and attractive to the cultivated ear of the vicinity. If I fail I make it up on the quantity of my shad. Six pounds, 55 cents. Thanks."

A GRANGER'S misfortune: "Some people hate to have their predictions fail, particularly if they are weather predictions. Tiff Jonnson, the model farmer of Del Valle settlement, was in town a few days ago, and he was complaining bitterly about the late cold snap not having been severe enough to freeze things. "But if it had been cold enough to freeze; you would have lost all your corn and fruit," we remarked. "What of that, when I had the drinks bet that there was going to be ice in April."

SCENE—horse-car filled with ladies. Hero—Newsboy with dirty face and big hole in the seat of his trousers. "'Ere's yer ovenin' papers! All about the Turkish war!! All about the Turkish war!!" No response from the lady passengers who probably, were a little nebulous as to the location of the Oriental conflict. Newsboy, disgurted—"Seems yer don't care nothin' about the poor Turks!" Exit.

A LITTLE girl braids the hair of one who sits in front of her, instead of studying, when the teacher remarks: "Home is the place for arranging the hair, not here. What would you think of my braiding my hair in school?" Presently Susan's hand is raised, and the teacher supposing she wishes to ask some question about the lesson, nods, when she hears the following: "Mary says your hair is false, and that you wouldn't dare to do it here."

Words are Not Sufficient.

89 LAFAYETTE ST., BROOKLYN, N. Y., July 16th, 1879.—H. H. WARNER, & Co: —Sirs—I can find no words sufficient to express my gratitude for having been rescued from the horrors of Bright's Disease by your Safe Kidney and Liver Cure.

JOHN CALDWELL.

SEVERAL men lately swam the Mississippi river above New Orleans on a wager. A reporter of the race says, "None of them seemed to be putting forth much effort till it was discovered that an alligator had struck out from the shore as a competitor; and then—well; every man did his best to keep the alligator from carrying off the stakes."

A NAVAL officer, for his courage in a fierce contest where he had lost a leg, had been preferred to the command of a good ship. In the heat of the next engagement a cannon ball took off his wooden deputy, so that he fell upon the deck. A seaman, thinking he had been wounded again, called out for a surgeon. "No, no," said the captain, "the carpenter will do."

AN Irish footman, having carried a basket of game from his master to a friend, waited a considerable time for the customary fee, but finding no present appeared, scratched his head and said, "Sir, if my master should say, 'Paddy, what did that gentleman give you?'—what would your honor have me tell him?"

I MET him again the other day. He had recovered from the relapse occasioned by our serious conversation of a month ago. I asked him where he had taken up his abode. "Oh," he replied, "I'm living by the canal for the present. I should be delighted if you'd drop in some evening." Then I left.

It has been noticed that copper, when heated with salt and subsequently cooled, is much tougher than ordinary copper, this being due, in all probability, to the removal of the cuprous oxide which is generally present in greater or less quantities. It has also been observed that the addition of salt to molten copper has the same effect as poling, and it seems that the determination of the lines of weight after such treatment is an easy and rapid method for the estimation of cuprous oxide present.

HEALTH IS WEALTH

RADWAY'S

Sarsaparillian Resolvent

Pure blood makes sound flesh, strong bones, a clear skin. If you would have your flesh firm, your bones sound, without caries, and your complexion fair, use RADWAY'S SARSAPARILLIAN RESOLVENT.

A remedy composed of ingredients of extraordinary medical properties essential to perfect repair and invigorate the broken-down and wasted body—QUICK, PLEASANT, SAFE and PERMANENT in its treatment and cure.

No matter by what name the complaint may be designated, whether it be Scrofula, Consumption, Syphilis, Ulcers, Sores, Tumors, Boils, Erysipelas, or Salt-Rheum diseases of the Lungs, Kidneys, Bladder, Womb, Skin, Liver, Stomach or Bones, either chronic or constitutional, the virus of the disease is in the BLOOD which supplies the waste and builds and repairs these organs and tissues of the system. If the blood is unhealthy the process of repair must be unsound.

THE SARSAPARILLIAN RESOLVENT not only has compensating remedy, but secures the harmonious action of each of the organs. It establishes throughout the entire system functional harmony and supplies the blood-vessels with a pure healthy current of new life. The skin, after a few days use of the Sarsaparillian, becomes clear and beautiful. Pimples, Blotches, Blackheads, Skin Eruptions are removed; Sores and Ulcers cured. Persons suffering from Scrofula, Syphilis, Diseases of the Eyes, Mouth, Ears, Legs, Nose, and Glands, that have accumulated and fester either from neglected diseases or mercury, or from the use of Corrosive Sublimate, may rely upon a cure if the Sarsaparillian is continued a sufficient time to make its impression on the system.

One bottle contains more of the active principles of Medicines than any other Preparation taken in teaspoonful doses, while others require five or six times as much.

ONE DOLLAR PER BOTTLE

FEVER AND AGUE.

FEVER AND AGUE cured for 50 cts. There is not a remedial agent in this world that will cure Fever and Ague, and other Malarious, Bilious, Scarlet, Typhoid, Yellow and other fevers aided by RADWAY'S PILLS) so quickly as RADWAY'S READY RELIEF.

It will in a few minutes, when taken according to the directions, cure Cramps, Spasms, Sour Stomach, Heartburn, Sick Headache, Diarrhœa, Dysentery, Colic, Wind in the Bowels, and all Internal Pains.

Travelers should always carry a bottle of RADWAY'S Ready Relief with them. A few drops in water will prevent sickness or pains from change of water. It is better than French Brandy or Bitters as a stimulant.

Miners and Lumbermen should always be provided with it.

CAUTION.

All remedial agents capable of destroying pain in an overdose should be avoided. Morphine, opium, strychnine, arnica, hyoscianus, and other powerful remedies, do at certain times, in very small doses, relieve the patient during their action on the system. But perhaps the second dose, if taken, may aggravate and increase the suffering, and the third or other dose cause death. There is no necessity using these uncertain agents when a positive remedy like Radway's Ready Relief will stop the most excruciating pain quicker, without entailing the least difficulty in either infant or adult.

THE TRUE RELIEF.

RADWAY'S READY RELIEF is the only remedial agent in vogue that will instantly stop pain.
